Bradey. (Dublin: Parkes and Co.)—This is another humorous extravaganza by the same author as "St. Patrick's Ruction," "Queer Papers," &c., and contains much the same characteristics as those pieces. Barney's rollicking comments on the early incidents of the late war will please that large and increasing number of readers who delight in comic literature.

The Standard Bearer: a Story of the Fourth Century. By Ellen Palmer. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo).—History in the guise of fiction has been attempted, and not unsuccessfully, by the author of this little volume. The scenes are laid in Rome and Britain; and in events described, we have glimpses of the domestic life of the middle classes at about the time when Christianity was making its way into the strongholds of paganism, and was beginning to be felt and acknowledged, not only by the common people, but also by kings and governors. Both writer and artist have fairly caught the spirit of the period; for the word-pictures, graphically related with the pen, are cleverly translated by the pencil into a series of really characteristic woodcuts.

Violet Rivers. By Winifred Taylor. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo).—"And so it came to pass one peaceful evening, that Herbert and Violet wandered through the woods... and there the old, old story was told again." These lines, though they come in at the end of the tale, like the moral to an ancient fable, form the text from which Miss Taylor preaches her admirable homily upon duty, faith, and womanly kindness. We find Violet a girl of thirteen, with her head full of fairy tales, and her spirit light and joyous, as becomes her years. But presently a heavy sorrow falls like a pall upon her young life. Her father dies, her mother is an invalid, her brother is consumptive, and upon this girl is thrust the whole weight of the responsibility usually borne by parents. She changes to a woman all at once but such a tender, thoughtful, wise little woman! And the years pass, and at last she finds her reward in the affection of the family, and the strong love of one who in all the years to come, will manfully bear the full half of her burdens.

Some words ordinarily used indifferently are by no means monymous, "Propose," "offer," and "pur-700nymous, "Propose," "offer," and purpose," for instance, are rightly explained by Mr. pose, for instance, are rightly explained by smith to have distinct, separate, and opposite meanings; we propose for consideration, we offer for acceptance, we purpose on our own previouslyformed and deliberate determination; a proposifion asks or implies the consent of another, a purpose an object personal to the proposer, and depending on his own will and motive to carry it into execution. So also will many words com-monly taken as identical: memory, for instance, is that capacity of mind by which we retain the knowledge of past events; recollection, the power to recall those events; remembrance, the act of remembering; reminiscence, the revivremembered ideas, feelings, or impressions, as when, on hearing an old song, we recall the time and place at which and where weafirst heard it mag. Much more might be written in illustration of this interesting branch of philology, but enough has been said to has been said to show its importance as an aid to an exact knowledge of our own language. There was a real need for a new Dictionary of Synonyms. Crabb's work is nearly obsolete, and the smaller tratises, more or less founded on or derived from it, are sadly inaccurate. Mr. Smith's volume is not as a smaller court of the court of t lume is not, as we have pointed out, nearly complete, or faultless, but it certainly stands a pool should be surely stands as the surel good chance, as each future edition will be revised and improved, of becoming the standard book of reference for scholars; for not only does it contain a larger number of like words than have previously been accounted but also. riously been compared and explained, but also, what is very valuable, numerous quotations from poets, historians, essayists, and public men, in illustration of the several meanings attached to words according to the according to the several meanings attached to words, according to the peculiar manner in which they are employed.

An Estay on the Druids, the Ancient Churches, and Estay on the Druids, the Ancient Churches, and Round Towers of Ireland. By the Rev. origin, object, and uses of the round towers of reland have been made the subject of much dission and many opposite theories; but, after a sarching investigation, aided by an intimate nowledge of the Celtic language, Mr. Smiddy as arrived at the conclusion that these time-worn and neglected structures were originally baptisteries or reed-houses, in which the rite of baptism was performed by infusion or pouring the water on the body; and that the round towers are them-selves a proof of Ireland's early Christian civilization and close connexion with the East. writes enthusiastically on the subject of the Druids, whom he concludes to have been originally priests, judges, physicians, astrologers, and bards, who came from the East, and were finally converted to Christianity in Ireland; and considers the Celtic language to have been not only the first language spoken by mankind, but also the base, or root, of the Latin, Greek, and all other modern tongues. This ancient language, he says, now on the point of dying out, even in Ireland, its last resting-place, just as, centuries ago, it disappeared in other countries under the dissolving influences of invasion and the introduction of foreign lingual elements. The language in which the ancient bards strung their harps, and which flowed with such grace from the lips of fair lady, brave chief, and Druidical sage, is now soon to take its departure for ever. This, in itself, may be a reason for endeavouring to raise even an humble monument out of it before it disappears altogether. Without its assistance the subject of the Druids could never be adequately handled, the names of the churches would remain a mystery, and the key to the cipher of the Round Tower would be lost for ever." In proof of all this, Mr. Smiddy brings forward many philological arguments, one of which is found in the popular Irish saying, Ni fhuil an sa bhas ach athraghadh beatha—"There is nothing in death but a change or alteration of the or alteration of life."

The Life of Hernando Cortez. By Arthur Helps (Bell and Daldy.)—Few personages stand out upon the historical canvas with greater pro-minence than Hernando Cortez and Francis Pizarro, the conquerors of Mexico and Peru. Much as had been written concerning Cortez, there was still room for another memoir; and this memoir, with new material and interesting facts not to be found in this author's "History of the Spanish Conquest," has been furnished by Mr. Arthur Helps. Cortez was a man, he tells us, who loved good government, and did his work, according to his light, thoroughly; whatever he did, he did with earnestness, and he has his reward in the fame accorded to him by posterity. Nothing strikes the reader of this memoir with greater wonder than the evidences of Mexican enlightenment and civilization more than three hundred and fifty years ago; "and," says Mr. Helps, referring to this fact, "everything I have read about New Spain convinces me that I have not, in the slightest degree, exaggerated the wonders and glories of ancient Mexico." The records from which Mr. Helps has derived his facts are very numerous; but the authorities upon whom he principally relies are Cortez himself, Bernal Diaz, a common soldier, and a man known in history as the "Anonymous Correspondent." These three accounts, written independently of each other, coincide in their main particulars, and in combining them into one authentic narrative, Mr. Helps has exercised his usual skill with more than his usual success.

Men Worth Imitating. By William H. Groser. (Sunday School Union.)—From the lives of such examples as Linneus, Dr. Doddridge, Dr. Adam Clarke, Archdeacon Paley, Samuel Drew, and the late George Mogridge, better known as "Old Humphrey," the author draws lessons of endurance, perseverance, sobriety, and moral excellence, in a way which will recommend his book to those who rightly think books are the best and most enduring form of gift for young people.

Casseli's Technical Educator. - The first volume of this work—the natural corollary of the series started in 1851 as the "Popular Educator". is now completed; and a very useful volume it In addition to a series of lessons on drawing and perspective, it contains chapters by competent writers on building-construction, age, applied mechanics, optics, the vegetable productions of commerce, &c., each subject illustrated with appropriate diagrams and woodcuts. Especially good are the articles by Professor Dresser, on the principles of design, in which he shows that all graining of wood, house painting in imitation of marble, floor-cloths representing tesselated pavements, carpets with flowers in relief, earthen water-jugs of imitation wicker-work, that would not hold water, and all attempts to make one material look like another, are false in art, and despicable in taste; but there was surely no especial need to add, as he has, that "the true artist is a rare creature; often unknown, frequently misunderstood, and not unfrequently lost to a people that prefer shallowness to deep meaning, falsehood to truth, and glitter to repose." In other articles there is a little occasional exaggeration; while some are evidently written to introduce the woodcuts; but, on the whole, the work is well fitted to provide self-teachers with the means of acquainting themselves with the leading principles of special arts and handicrafts.

Astronomy Simplified for General Reading. By J. A. S. Ronwyl. (Tegg.)—The stars and nebulæ, the solar system, and the general scheme of astronomical science, are here explained in what strikes us as a very happy and intelligible Each section is illustrated with coloured method. maps and plans of the principal phenomena of the heavens-eclipses, sun-spots, comets, meteors, the milky way, and the aspects of the skies in both hemispheres; and there is added an interesting chapter on spectrum analysis. This is rendered necessary by the frequent references in the work itself to the conditions of sight prismatically developed, and to the author's remarks on the researches of Newton, Brewster, Herschel, and other philosophers. As a book for self-teachers and junior classes, the work may be specially commended.

John Heywood's Explanatory Book of Standard Potry. (Manchester: Heywood.)—The merit of this selection consists in the attempt, most successfully made by the editor, to give the reader a general insight into the meaning of the poems selected. The volume is designed for children; and all who have had to do with education, and experienced the difficulty of making them understand the meaning and purport of some of the most popular poems in our language, will appreciate Mr. Heywood's labours.

Théatre Français Moderne. A Selection of Modern French Plays. Third Series. (Trübner and Co.)—This volume of the series of Modern French Plays, edited by the Rev. Ernest Brette, Dr. Charles Cassal, and Professor Karcher, comprises the comedy "Les Faux Bonshommes," by Théodore Barrière, and "L'Honneur et L'Argent, a comedy by Ponsard. Each play is prefaced by a memoir of its author, and an explanation of phrases, allusions, and idoms, which, to thoroughly understand, requires a knowledge of French habits and thought, and of French society.

The Pasigraphical Dictionary and Grammar. By Auton Bachmaier. Pasigraphicher Wörterluch, a German version. Dictionnaire Pasigraphique, a French version of the above. Each in 32mo. (Trübner and Co.)—W. Blachmaier is an enthusiast who believes that he has discovered a universal language. "Pasigraphy," he tells us in his preface, "teaches people to communicate with one another in writing, by means of numbers, which convey the same ideas in all languages; and thus it reunites people whom languages separate." In order to carry out Mr. Bachmaier's system, the grammar, or syntax must first be learned. This accomplished, nothing more remains to be done than to look out the words you purpose using, and then transmitting the numbers marked against them to your correspondent in France or Germany, and he, on looking these numbers out in his pasigraphic lexicon, will, on copying them on to paper, find that he has at the same time translated your letter. The same plan is applicable to Chinese, or any other language.

Lecture on the Laws of Life, with Special Reference to the Physical Education of Girls. By (Sampson Low and Elizabeth Blackwell, M.D. Co.)-The attention which the establishment of School Boards has directed to the important question of the physical education of women has induced Dr. Blackwell to republish this series of lectures, which she originally delivered as far back as the year 1852. There is a homely good sense in the arguments put forward, and a kindly spirit of justice which does not run into rapture when the writer speaks of her own sex. The publication is appropriate to the present wide discussions, and Dr. Blackwell has as much to say, and says it as well, as any of her fellow-labourers. The subject is not hastily considered, but there is a definite and reasonable arrangement of the principal points under separate divisions. These are prefaced by introductory remarks bearing on the general question; and at the conclusion of the book certain afterthoughts and suggestions are added as supplemental.

The Readiest Wages Reckoner ever Invented.

By J. Walton, Accountant. Post folio. (W. Tegg.)—We are disposed to believe that Mr. Walton has correctly described this work. Commencing with three shillings a week, or sixpence a day, he gives corresponding tables up to two guineas a week, each table commencing with a quarter of an hour, and proceeding to eighty-two hours and a half, which we presume to be the full extent of a working man's week of labour. There is a finder-index, so that any rate of weekly wages can be instantly referred to.

Scraps of Knowledge. By Janet Byrne. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.)—Little readers are, in this prettily illustrated volume, introduced to Alfred the Great, Napoleon Buonaparte, James Watt, Captain Cook, Florence Nightingale, and other famous people; are told how cotton is grown, and sugar is made; how deaf and dumb boys are taught to read and understand; what the Laplanders and the Japanese are like; with many bits of miscellaneous knowledge concerning natural history, &c.,—all in the pleasant and artless manner in which a mother may be supposed to talk to her children. In fact, here is a reading-book in which every lesson gives pleasure, and every page contains some fact worth remembering.

A Handy Book on Food and Diet in Health and Disease. By C. A. Cameron, M.D. (Baillière, Tindall, and Cox.)—Recent researches have shed considerable light on the processes of nutrition and the means by which the heat and energy of our bodies are maintained. These facts are fully discussed and explained in this popular manual, which contains much valuable information on the nature and functions of food, the constituents of animal, vegetable, and mineral food, the worth of stimulants and condiments, the character o adulterations, the proper modes of cooking, and the best means of diet.

rictle with The Monks of Iona: a Reply to "Iona," by the Duke of Argyll. With a Review of "The Cathedral and Abbey Church of Iona," by the Rt. Rr. the Bishop of Argyll and the Isles. Dedi-cated to the Most Noble the Marquis of Lorne.

17. Stewart M Corry, D.D. (R. Washbourne.) -lis difficult to convey a notion of the bad taste wh which this reply to the Duke of Argyll's mide in "Good Words" has been written. But paragraph from the preface may be taken as a saple of the spirit in which the whole pamphlet spend:-"The subject matter originally appared in sundry numbers of that monthly serial thich bears the misnomer 'Good Words, then is superintended by the Very Rev. Dr. Noran Macleod, late Moderator of the General deembly, and Chaplain to Her Majesty in Scotand We have purposely employed the term the Good Words ought to be True Words: but he words uniformly written in its pages, in referace to the Catholic religion, are not true, thereandy to expose their falsehood; but the pawkie capase their laisenood; but the paracher ditor, if we may be pardoned the exessive Scotticism, had not the chivalry of daracter to admit our animadversions of the contant. manns!" It is an old saying, that the disputant the loses his temper has always the worst of the agament. It was quite open to Dr. M'Corry to Moment the assertions of the Duke anent the links of lona, "that illustrious island, which says Dr. Johnson) was once the luminary of the Gledonian regions, whence savage clans and Dring burbarians derived the benefits of know-lege and the blessings of religion." But Dr. Comy has lost his temper, and—Q. E. D. beless, there is much in his rejoinder that may be red with advantage by those who perused the Dake of Argyll's "Iona."

Father Hyacinthe: Orations. With a Sketch of his Life, and Portrait on steel. and Soit.)—The fame of this great Catholic ontor and preacher is so extensive that all readers will accept this account of his life. The Memoir, which has had the large of the Sather's reviwhich has had the benefit of the Father's revision, is succinct, but sufficient to furnish the bio-Raphical details necessary for forming a correct details necessary for forming a continuous of the life and present position of the author of the orations it precedes; whilst the orations themselves are just such utterances, at to subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and form, as will explain to Protestiant, the subject and the su lans the reason why Charles Loyson, worldkanous as Pere Hyacinthe, has had such influence in the Catholic Church. The Ten Commandments. By R. W. Dale, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. (Hodder and Stoughton.) This is a volume to be highly commended. Most semons contain but little that interest the general reader—nothing to set him thinking—this will do both. Mr. Dale is the successor of the late much espected John Angell James, in the pulpit of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham. sation consists of working people, young men ind women engaged in retail shops, and retail radesmen; in fact, a congregation of "nobodies of any importance," but still people who consider that they have souls to be saved, and who are able to appreciate a good sermon when they hear In order to tickle the ears of such a congregation, say some, the preacher must be vulgar, irreverent, and democratic. But it is no such thing; these sermons are plain, outspoken, reverent homilies, inculcating the highest aspirations of the holiness of life, teaching men that their best chance of getting to heaven consists in a good preparation for it here, and the best preparation for it here, is in keeping the commandments. We have not looked into the theology of the sermons; it may perhaps be very heterodox, or may be up to the usual standard. We have not looked to this, but have read several of the sermons, and think that they may safely be commended to the notice of preachers as good models of plain preaching upon subjects too frequently lost sight of in these days of polemic Christianity.

The Life and Labours of Duncan Matheson, the

Scottish Evangelist. By the Rev. John Macpherson. (Morgan, Chase, and Scott.)—Duncan

Matheson was one of those hardy sons of the North, who, bred up in poverty, succeeded in educating himself as so many others of his countrymen have done, and rising to a position of usefulness. Much was due to his pious mother, and notwithstanding all its defects, much was also due to the theology embodied in the Assembly's catechism. This made him reason within himself; and, although he did not consider himself converted till a somewhat late period, he lived a good, moral, religious life. After becoming awakened, he entered the ministry as an itinerant preacher upon a stipend of forty pounds a year; went to the Crimea during the war, but ill health compelled his return, and he died in 1869, before completing his forty-fifth year. Matheson was one whom the older puritans would have delighted to honour, but whose mode of life and ideas were too severe for this laxer generation of Christians.

Helps at the Mercy Seat. By Rev. John M.
Putnam. (Edinburgh: Johnston and Hunter.) Reprinted by arrangement with the American publishers.—These hymns will probably attract considerable attention in their new English dress. They consist of selections from the works of Fenelon, Pascal, Dr. Keble, Dr. Guthrie, Barry Cornwall, Horatio Bonar, Mrs. Barbauld, H. W. Longfellow, Dr. Bowring, and others; with original poems—for many of them deserve that distinction from their superiority over ordinary hymns—by Mr. Putnam himself; arranged under distinct headings, as "Praise," "Faith," "Old Age," "Night Watches," "The Sabbath," "The Lord's Prayer," and "Heaven." Altogether a good collection

Parish Musings; or, Devotional Poems. By John S. B. Monsell, LL.D. (Rivingtons.)-It is now almost twenty-one years since the first edition of these poems was printed, and so any minute criticism of the work would now be illtimed. The volume contains many poems above the average of such compositions. Without asserting that Dr. Monsell has the true poetic gift—the power of singing for the sake of singing—we can confidently avow our opinion that some of the pieces we have read will bear comparison with any that have appeared since he first sent his volume to the press. The work is rightly dewolume to the press. The work is rightly described by himself, as "not the cold musings of but the warm gushings the head of one, at ease; but the warm gushings of the heart of one, toiling himself, and striving to lead others, amid the dust and conflict of the journey of life." Among the poems we most admire are those entitled "Easter Hymn," "Parting," "Silence," "A Wounded Spirit," "Love," and "Onward."

John Wesley: His Life and His Book. By the ey, Matthieu Lelievre. Translated by the Rev. Rev. Matthieu Lelièvre. J. French, B.A. (Wesleyan Conference Office.)—The French Methodists, being upprovided with any standard life of Wesley, the French Conference, some months ago, invited competitive memoirs, and by the unanimous consent of the adjudicators, the palm was awarded to the Rev. Matthieu Lelievre, who has produced a very interesting and readable biography, which, notwithstanding the fact that several memoirs of Wesley already exist, has been translated by the Rev. Mr. French, of South Shields, and published under the auspices of the Wesleyan Con-No new facts are added to the particulars lately given in the Life by the Rev. Luke Tyerman, but the work is acceptable as showing the interest taken by foreigners in everything concerning the founder of Methodism.

Pilgrim Songs in Cloud and Sunshine. By Newman Hall, LL.B. (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.)—Written at various times, in scanty intervals of leisure during the last thirty years, these hymns and devotional songs are of varying merit, some few of them being real poems, while others are hardly superior to the jingles of Sternhold and Hopkins. But, as Mr. Hall justly remarks in his introductory note, a hymn adapted to express or excite religious emotion may be good, even though it lacks the highest qualities of poetry. In this little book, however, the good verses largely out-

Palestine: its Holy Sites and Sacred Story. By John Tillotson (Ward, Lock, and Tyler.)—We have here, in one compact octavo, a good digest of all that is known of the Holy Land, both as regards its ancient glories and its modern features, industriously compiled from a large variety of sources, and the text illustrated with maps and more than three hundred and fifty engravings printed on toned paper. Beginning with the Creation of the World, Mr. Tillotson carries on the story, from epoch to epoch, down to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman soldiery under Titus, and the final dispersion of the Jews; adding in almost every chapter important facts given by old writers, and confirmed by modern research; and concluding with a passage that reads like a prophecy :-- "We may cheerfully look forward to the Jews being yet a very great people. With regard to the tide coming and breaking on the shore, we may disregard the idle curl of the wave ruffled by the wind, but when every wave is moving in the same direction, then the tide is clearly to be seen at work. We find a law in nature—we seek a cause—and trace it to the skies!" The compiler's design has been to "place the geography of Palestine in loving rela-tion to the sacred story;" and he has certainly succeeded in producing a volume—his last and his best—which will enable him to take rank as a writer only just below Dr. Kitto.

ALBERT BARNES.—Threescore and Ten: a Memorial of the late Albert Barnes. (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.)—Bishop Stevens of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, in an eloquent address on the occasion of Mr. Barnes' funeral, claimed for his deceased friend the distinction of belonging to all Christendom; and certainly few biblical writings are better known, or more extensively read, than "Barnes' Commentaries," his "Notes on the Psalms," and his "Life of St. Paul." The present volume consists of a Biographical Sketch by Dr. March, a Discourse delivered by Mr. Barnes at Philadelphia on December 6th, 1868, just two years before his death, and an account of the funeral services, the action of the congregation, the action of the session, the memorial sermons, &c., at Philadelphia in December last. The Memoir is comparatively scanty of incidents, merely giving the dates of the great Commentator's birth and various preferments in the Presbyterian Church of America; but it is full of thoughtful remarks and appreciative comments. Dr. March shows us that Mr. Barnes was a hard-working man, just and faithful, conscientious, kindly, independent, outspoken, true, and good. activity he bears honourable testimony. Mr. Barnes always wrote in the early morning. "When the lawyer appeared in his office, the merchant in his counting room, the man of fashion at his breakfast table, Mr. Barnes had done his day's work of authorship. In consequence of his industrious and long-continued improvement of these early hours, he is now, and for a long time is likely to be, the one man to whom the greatest number of readers go to learn what the Bible neans. . . Wherever the English Bible is studied, his simple, familiar, unpretending expositions of it are sure to go. . . Others have displayed more learning, but Mr. Barnes surpasses all others in that good sense which everybody understands, in that simplicity which the common people love, in that fulness and fidelity which is adapted to all capacities, in that fairness and candour which disarm opposition, and in that fervent and practical aim which reaches every heart. . . There has been no other like him in all our American history. I look the world over in vain to find his equal in the rare combination of meekness and courage, quietness and strength, modesty and worth, self-command and self-control, friendship to man and devotion to God, simplicity of private life and power over millions to teach them the word of truth." It is only for us to add that this volume, which is pre-faced with an excellent portrait and autograph of Mr. Barnes, seems likely to make his name and labours known outside and far beyond that large though special circle in which they were and are so thoroughly and deservedly appreciated.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S PUBLICA-TIONS. — Breaking through a custom now "more honoured in the breach than the observance," of publishing only, or principally, at the Christmas season, the Religious Tract Society has lately issued some half-dozen noticeable volumes, varying in subject, but in some respects equal in interest. Among them are-

Family Readings, from the Gospel according to St. Matthew; consisting of short passages with a simple exposition, for daily use in Christian households, by the Rev. Francis Bourdillon, whose "Parables of Our Lord," and other devotional books, have long ago been recognized and accepted. A passage from the Gospel is given in small type, and then explained in a few well-written pages; and in this way the reader gets the whole of the sacred story from the birth to the resurrection of the Saviour. Many, to whom the Scriptures are unattractive reading, will persuse these chapters with attention and delight.

Nails Driven Home, or "Mr. Gresham's Wayside Lectures," is a series of domestic stories by George E. Sargent, some of which have already appeared in the pages of the "Tract Magazine," where they attracted considerable attention.

The Two Little Bruces is a story for boys and girls, showing the value and importance of self-denial, truthfulness, and patience under trial and difficulty. Just such a book as will be readily purchased by parents and teachers, and read with avidity by the young folks for whom author and artist have striven to render it attractive.

Captain Cook, by W. H. G. Kingston, is a true matter of this gallant English sailor's three rorsges round the world, his achievements and discoveries, his search for the supposed southern continent, his abortive expedition, as commander of the Resolution and Discovery, in search of a north-west passage, and his unfortunate death at Owhyhee, on the 11th of February, 1799, at the comparatively early age of fifty-one; the final chapter being a short history of the Polynesian lslands, to which is added a useful tabular statement of their present condition, size, government, population, religion, and the nature and amount d missionary agency employed in their civilization. This appears to be very extensive, and upon the thole very successful; for since the death of the great circumnavigator, we find that the Sandwich lands with 130,000 inhabitants; the Georgian goup, with 9,000; the Austral Isles, with 4,000; the Paumotu and Hervey (or Cook's Islands) groups, with about 20,000; the Friendly and Avigator's Islands, with 45,000; the Fiji Islets, 25 in number, with some 25,000 people; Ellice's group, the Loyalty Islands, and some thers with an aggregate population of 30,000; have been more or less won from cannibalism and heathen practices to decency and Christianity. To such an extent, indeed, is this the case, that while English missionaries are constantly working in their midst, English and American tragedians, comedians, and opera-singers, when they make the grand tour, which now-a-days includes both hemispheres, seldom fail to pay a visit to Hawaii (Cook's Owhyhee), and Viti Levu, the capitals of the Sandwich and Fiji Islands. that the volume is capitally illustrated with up-We need only add wards of sixty new and characteristic engravings.

From Mr. J. Campbell, Freemont Street, Boston, U.S.A. — The Gynacological Yournal for May. In Boston there exists a Society of medical men who are interested in that branch of the profession which treats of diseases possible to women. Not merely treats of diseases peculiar to women. Not merely obstetries but in those peculiar organizations in which females differ from the other sex. He publishes a nonthly journal which is deserving the attention of medical positions.

From the Church of England Education Society: Grammar made Easy

From whom we don't know :- The Dawn, No. 1. rrom whom we don't know:—The Dawn, No. 1. It dates from Edinburgh, or appears to do so, and is to appear monthly. It is intended to be funny, Dawn, we presume being the vernacular for our English term Punch. The first article is upon the personnel of the Edinburgh Town Council; it is outgrageously comic or what is the same thing is intended rageously comic, or, what is the same thing, is intended to be so. Only think of the treasurer being a printer;

one of the council is a printer No. 2, another a pious publisher, and the other bodies all equally unassuming tradesmen. The second article is on "Young Glasgow of the Period," the writer, a "gentleman" of the good city, probably describing therein his own every-day life. No. 3 is Church-Going in Edinburgh, followed by other articles of a local character. To followed by other articles of a local character. us Southrons it is a difficult matter to see the wit, but we are willing to acknowledge our stupidity, and if our Scottish friends insist upon it, will admit that the Dawn is outrageously and extravagantly full of wut and humour.

From Miss Emily Faithfull:— The Victoria Magazine. We really must apologise to the Month of the plished publisher for taking no notice of this Magazine, which has duly come to hand month after month. We gave it a good word at starting, also once or twice since, and all along it has had our good wishes; we do not approve of all that it contains, and are rude enough to think that many of Miss Faithfull's supporters have mistaken the proper vocation of women; still we like to hear what they have to say, and think it right that they should have an organ, so well conducted as the Victoria Magazine, in which they may vent their complaints, and express their hopes and aspirations regarding the future position of the sex.—A Few Words on the Woman's Franchise Question.

By James Thornton Horkins, B.A. Our Jemima, who read the pamphlet one morning when breakfast was half a hour late, says that Mr. Horkins is "a bloated harristocrat; he only writes to please some young lady as he's sweet on;—the hideer, that only those of the sex as 'as property worth £1,000, and can produce a stiffycate from some college of business heart disability after the hideer. lege of having been edicated in Moral and Political Philosopty. New and Rare Beautiful-Leaved Plants.

This Uniform Series of Works on the various branches of Natural History has already attained a high reputation, both for the extremely low price at which they are published, and the general excellence with which they are produced. They form collectively a Standard set of Works on the different subjects which they illustrate, and deserve the attention of all who study this branch of science for their faithful illustrations and accuracy of description; the plates being carefully executed by accomplished artists, and the authorship entrusted to writers of acknowledged merit. Indeed no higher testimony can be borne to their value than the fact that the late Prince Consort (himself an able student of Natural History), so highly esteemed those already published during his life-time, that he purchased copies of them for presentation to public institutions.

Primitive Man. By Louis Figurer.

Popular Manual of the prevailing Theories of the Descent of Man, as promulgated by Dr. Darwin, Sir Charles Lyell, Sir John Lubbock, Professor Huxley, E. B. Tylor, and other eminent Ethnologists, Translated from the last French Edition, and Revised by E. B. T. In One Volume, 8vo, Illustrated with 263 Figures of objects belonging to Pre-historic Ages, 30 of which are full-page Scenes of Primitive Life. Extra cloth. Reduced to 9s.

"An interesting and essentially popular resumt of all that has been written on the subject. M. Figuier has collected together the evidences which modern researches have accumulated, and has Primitive Man from the Mosaic account of Man's creation, and does not admit that the authority of first appearance upon earth. Whether Man is derived from any other Animal species, particularly from the Ape, occupies much space in this work, and the author's conclusion is against the Darwinian theory. Merchant Intelligence and Speech are really the attributes which constitute Man, and not merely his physical properties. Here (adds the Reviewer) is an interesting book with 263 illustrations, of which 30 are full-page engravings, confessedly somewhat fanciful in their combinations, but which will be found on examination to be justified by that soundest evidence, the actual discovery of the objects of which they represent the use."—See Athenaum, Aug. 13, 1870.

to the use of the Professional Man and the Amateur; comprising, 1. A Diction-ARY OF PAINTERS, in which 1500 more Names are given than in any previous work; 2. The late Dr. Copt.Exrons, Bb. of Llandaff, remarks:—
"A work which I can never cease to recommend as alone sufficient to instruct a mind desirous of the truth on this momentous subject in all its branches. It is a book full of learning, and scruppulous in giving authorities for all its statements; and yet so written that it may serve as a manual even to those who have not had a learned education, and may put them in possession of all that is necessary to guide their judgment, and to maintain the cause of their Church against the Church of Rome, and against those who, though not professed members, are her ambiguous apologists and abettors. There is not, I believe, so good a thesaurus to be found anywhere, of all that relates to this subject."

 This Scries of Books, from the very superior manner in which it is produced, is at once the Cheapest and Handsomest Edition of the Poets in the market. The volumes form elegant and appropriate Presents as School Prises and Gift-Books, either in cloth or morocco.

"They are a marvel of cheapness, some of the volumes extending to as many as 700, and even 900 pages, printed on toned paper in a beautifully clear type. Add to this, that they are profusely illustrated with wood engravings, are elegantly and tastefully bound, and that they are published at 3s. 6d. each, and our recommendation of them is complete."—Scotsman.

The MAPS contain such Geographical and Topographical Illustrations as are required in the study of the Sacred History. They are accurately drawn, and care has been taken to distinguish what is certain from what is only probable. The Notes contain a selection of references bearing on the positions of places, and compact views of the most important questions on the Geography and Topography of the Bible, with hints to assist those who may wish to follow out more thoroughly particular topics of inquiry. The INDEX, compiled by Mr. Grove, gives the original name of each place in Hebrew or Greek, with an exhaustive statement of its occurrences in the English Bible, and the modern name wherever it can be identified with certainty or with fair probability.

SECOND EDITION.

The FOUR GOSPELS, according to the Authorised Version. With a Brief Commentary by the Rev. W. Walsham How, M.A., Honorary Canon of St. Asaph, Rural Dean, Rector of Whittington, Salop. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

The Second Volume, containing the rest of the New Testament, is in the Press.

The aim of the Commentary is to give such information as is likely to render the study of the Holy Scriptures more easy to a reader of ordinary intelligence, especially to the Young, passing over no real difficulties, but abstaining from learned and elaborate discussions. Such practical reflections are introduced as seem to arise naturally out of the passages under consideration, and are in truth an essential part of the exposition. Some varieties of reading, suggested by the examination of the best manuscripts, have been noticed, and some amendments in the translation have been proposed, which seem to make particular passages more easily understood.

NATURAL HISTORY OF THE BIBLE. By the Rev. H. B. TRISTRAM, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Author of "The Land of Israel." With numerous Illustrations, Second Edition, Revised and Corrected. Demy 12mo, cloth boards, red edges, price 75. 6d.

STEAM TYPE-COMPOSING MACHINE

Now on View at the West Gallery, No. 5, Moving Machinery, International Exhibition,

PRICE OF THE MACHINES.

One Machine competent to set 12,000 an hour, of any size of type, all the day through, with Two Perforators, will be from £400 to £500, according to the kind of Perforator chosen.

THE SAVING IN PRODUCTION.

The Composing Machine having been tested both mechanically and pecuniarily, Mr. Mackie is prepared to undertake type-setting for 12 months, for any London or other House, which purchases a Composer, at Threepence per Thousand, whatever the size of type; set in lines about 18 inches long; read and corrected to copy, and spaced with any one thickness of space required. Any one may estimate the cost of "justifying" by setting a column in long lines with spaces of one size, and then dividing it into proper lines. Each Printer must send his own type, which will be duly accounted for, in pages, not in cases, and pay the carriage, which will be guaranteed not to exceed one half-penny per thousand both ways.

Any speed required will be guaranteed; but MS. copy must be punctuated in the style used at the office sending it.

THE NEW TABLE OF LESSONS. - The Church Service question may now be considered as settled; the bill authorizing the use of the new table has now passed its second reading, and will, in a few weeks, become law. By an amendment which appears to have been thrust in by some influential persons, evidently in a minority, but whom the ministry thought it prudent to propitiate, the use of the new service is not made compulsory till Jan. 1879, but may be used from and after January next. One of the results of this is, so far, an advantage to members of the trade, who will thus have seven years longer to dispose of their stocks; but they will also be compelled to supply the new edition, if asked for. We may be permitted to caution the trade not to be in any hurry to order large quantities of the new edition. Some editions, printed last year, are not perfect, as one alteration was made no later than the 30th ult.; and in those books already bound, a cancel leaf must be inserted. In one edition which has come under our notice, the lessons are given according to the new Calendar, but the Calendar itself is the old one. Even at the risk of losing the sale of a few copies, it will therefore be wise to wait till the authorized presses have prepared entirely new and perfect editions.

With respect to prayer-books, too, it is a question whether those printed for some time to come should not have both tables of lessons. Unless this is done, it will be difficult for persons living in parishes where the old lessons are used, to find out what is to be read; their prayer-book says one thing, their clergyman another.

In the arrangement of the Lessons, too, we observe that, for the first time, there is a want of uniformity; the Church Services issued by the three authorized presses all differ. The Oxford book follows the old arrangement; the London book gives not only the New Testament, but also gives the selected New Testament Lessons in addition. The Cambridge book gives the same as the Oxford, but with a different, and, we are disposed to think, a better arrangement.

Keeping all these things in view, we repeat our recommendation to the trade not to order too largely at first, but to wait until everything is finally settled before laying in any very large stock of either Prayer Books or Church Services.

RIGHTS OF EDITOR.—In an action lately brought against the Editor of the Echo, for the value of an article sent unsolicited, the judge decided that articles so sent were at the disposal of the editor, who had the liberty of accepting or refusing; and that, if he gave notice to that effect, he had the right to destroy those which he did not accept.

TAUNTON.—Mr. Gray informs us he has transferred the business of Mr. Edward C. Dyer, of 53, North Street, to Mr. Alexander Hammett, from Wellington, Somerset.

DR. A. KEITH JOHNSTON.—We have received a short monograph of the labours of this distinguished geographical scholar, and from it learn, for the first time, the extent of his labours, and the obligations he has laid upon the community. His taste for the study appears to have been inherent; it first displayed itself in 1830, in a "Traveller's Guide-book for Scotland," but his first great work was the "National Atlas," of which he drew the greater part of the maps, and wrote nearly all the names they contain with his own hand. Physical geography was an unknown term till introduced by Mr. Johnston, now it is taught in most schools. He has also published a "Dictionary of Geography," and various "Textbooks," and is now engaged in the preparation of various atlases and maps of a popular kind. During the forty years of his active business life he has, more largely than any other living author, helped to popularize geography amongst all classes of the community, but no public recognition of his services has ever been rendered, except the honorary degree of LL.D., granted by the University of Edinburgh. He has, however, received a more lasting recognition by the recep-tion given to his works by the general public, and by the association of his name with such a noble monument as the Physical Atlas. Had Dr. Keith Johnston slaughtered a few thousand men, or ravaged a province, he would probably have been made a baron.

ROBERT CHAMBERS. - In Lippincott's Magazine for July we find one of the most truthful pictures we have yet seen of the late Dr. Robert Chambers, from the son of one of his early friends, who had emigrated to America, but with whom he kept up a constant correspondence. The following extract from one of his earlier letters, dated 1824, will serve to show how industrious he was in building his own reputation. "You may depend upon a copy of the 'Traditions of Edinburgh,' and a review of them, as soon as they are ready. I am busy just now in writing reviews of them myself, for the various works I can get them put into, being now come to a resolution that an author always understands his own business best, and is, indeed, the only person capable of doing his work justice. I stood too much upon punctilio in my maiden work, the 'Illustrations,' and trusted the reviewing of it to fellows who knew nothing about the subject—at least had not thought of it half so much as I had done, who was quite au fait with the whole matter. This was quite au fait with the whole matter. fault I am determined to correct in my forthcoming work." His biographer adds, "From the tone of this announcement one might infer that it was considered perfectly en règle for an author to be his own reviewer, and that he was giving proof of a squeamish delicacy in transferring the service to persons of his own selection. In Mr. Chambers's case the frank and more direct method seems to have answered admirably."

EVENINGS WITH THE POETS.—Under this title the accomplished proprietor of the Victoria Press, Miss Emily Faithfull, is giving a course of evening lectures on the poets of England and America, and the "prose-writing" poets. Our lady friends will do well to attend these lectures, they will then have an opportunity of hearing how poets and also how well ladies understood when they enunciate their th distinctness and with proper modula-

SIR WALTER SCOTT.—In the current part of the Lessure Hour we find a portrait of Sir Walter Scott which is entirely new to us; it was sketched by Mr. Robert Scott Moncrieff some time between 1816 and 1820; it is in profile. Other portraits give the front face, and shows the head to be disproportionately high, so high that it gave rise to the capital mot that Scott "had a story in his head more than any other man."

THE ANNUAL REGISTER. - The volume of this useful work for 1870 has recently been published, and is as well compiled as any of its immediate predecessors. We, however, desire to draw the attention of the proprietors to the desirability of making it more useful, more a reflex of the present time, and, in fact, making it a useful handbook of the present, instead of preparing it for a place on the shelf as a companion of the past. In order to do this, a considerable amount of remodelling is necessary. All that the volume at present contains should be retained, but many parts may be compressed. The Editor should be acquainted with a fact of which he appears ignorant, viz., that the British Empire extends beyond the United Kingdom, and that even on the Continent there are other countries besides France and Germany. We do not desire to find fault with the 1870 volume, it clearly belongs to the past. If the proprietors desire the "Annual Register to have a long future, they should endeavour to make the work move with the times.

PICTORIAL WALL BILLS. — Everybody is acquainted with the beautiful cartoons with which the "British Workman" is illustrated; they are the boldest and most effectual cuts issued in any of the penny periodicals. The publishers have adopted the happy idea of printing fifty of them separately upon sheets of royal paper, with some large type letter-press around, and have issued them as "Pictorial Wall Bills." Many a nurteery and workshop will, in future, be ornamented sery and workshop will, in future, be ornamented with these noble specimens of the art of woodengraving, and many an artisan will learn to buy his own cherries," and do sundry other sensible things inculcated in these useful sheets.

FINE PRINTING.—Amateurs and collectors of elegant and curious books will do well to procure a copy of La Vie et la Ligende de Madame Sainte Notburg, établissement de la foi Chrétienne dans la Notburg, établissement de la foi Chrétienne dans la Vallée du Neckar; ouvrage divisé en trois livres et Vallée du Neckar; ouvrage divisé en trois livres et tente-neuf chapitres par M. de Beuchesne et orné de quatre-vingt quatre gravures d'après les dessins de quatre-vingt quatre gravures d'après les dessins on papier Bristol, by M. Plon, of Paris, at that on papier Bristol, by M. Plon, of Paris, at that woodcuts is marvellously fine, but less care has been expended upon the text, which is in antique black-letter; round each page are red lines which cross each other. Altogether the book is one of those covetable gems which all collectors desire to possess.

OLD BALLADS.—Mr. John Pearson announces a new and verbatim reprint of the 1723 collection of old ballads in three volumes, with fac-simile reproductions of the 45 copper plates.

Mr. Tegg has a revised and cheap edition of Mr. Nicholas Michell's poetical works in the press. This collected edition will be comprised in seven uniform volumes, each complete in itself, to be published at short intervals. Much original matter will be introduced in some of the volumes. The first volume, "Famous Women and Heroes," will be ready in July.

AUTHORSHIP.—The American Literary Gazette chronicles the elevation of Miss Burdett Coutts to the peerage, as an Author—of endless munificent charities!

MACHINE. -Mackie's Type-Composing From time to time, various mechanical con-trivances for picking up and arranging metal types for printing have been attempted. Nearly thirty years ago, Mr. E. Lloyd had at work, in his office in Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, a typecomposing machine, which was to utterly super-sede hand-labour. In 1851, and at subsequent exhibitions, inventions of similar character have been shown; and Messrs. Spottiswoode have, it is said, stowed away in some lumber-room in New-street Square, a sufficient number of curiosities in the way of type-setting automata to make a small museum. Hitherto, no marked prosperity has attended any mechanical plan for setting type. Ingenious as many of the contrivances were, they all failed to successfully compete with the deft fingers and intelligent brain of the compositor; and, after being sufficiently patented, praised, and practised, they fell into disuse, and were eventually relegated to the limbo of forgotten things. last, however, an apparatus has appeared which apparently promises, in the course of time, to do for the compositor what the sewing-machine has done for the sempstress-not to supersede, but to greatly assist and facilitate manual operations. All the previous type-setting machines have been constructed on the plan of a piano; the operator touching a key and liberating a single metal letter, which fell into a channel, and, with other letters, formed words and sentences to be subsequently "spaced out" and "justified" into lines, paragraphs, and pages, by the compositor, in the ordinary way. In this latter respect, the new Type-composerdoes not differ from its predecessors; but in the principle of gathering together the types, it is quite distinct. Instead of the operator himself directing the onward flow of the type by striking keys or pedals, the action of the machine is purely automatical, and is governed by a strip of perforated paper, in a manner analogous to the means by which the perforated cards in a Jacquard-loom govern and adjust the silken threads in any desired form or pattern. Without attempting anything like a technical description of Mr. Alexander Mackie's Type-composer—to do which the casily are the casily of would require diagrams and details not easily comprehended by any out mechanicians—we may state the general results arrived at from a personal inspection of the apparatus, which is to be seen daily at work in the West Gallery of the International Exhibition, where it attracts considerable attention.

After the MS. of a book, pamphlet, or article is written, three separate processes are performed by the compositor before the printed matter is ready for the press. First, he "distributes his letter"—that is, fills the composing case with type,—each letter in its allotted receptacle or box. This is a rapid process, notwithstanding the fact that every individual piece of metal is separately dropped from the fingers of the operator. Next, with the author's copy before him, he picks up—letter by letter, point by point, and space by space—the types necessary for the several words and sentences, and arranges them in lines, of a determinate width, in a little steel frame, held in his left hand, called the "composing stick." Then, when sufficient matter has been composed, the type—collected on slips of wood or brass, called "galleys,"—is made up into columns or pages, and securely fastened in an iron frame. An impression, called a proof, is taken of the matter so composed; the proof is examined by the Reader for errors of grammar, punctuation, &c.; the necessary corrections are made by the compositor; and finally the type is sent to press, to be worked off, by hand or steam as the case may be. It is this second process—the picking up or "composing" of the metal types—which is performed by the new machine. And this process consists of two distinct operations—the perforating of the strips of paper, about two inches wide, which govern the action of the type-setting machine, and the setting up of the types by the machine itself. The Perforator is a little apparatus about the size of a sewing machine, with sixteen keys in front; the pressure upon them by the fingers of the operator producing certain clean round holes or perforations, something like those on a postage stamp, but rather larger. These strips of perforated paper are then taken to the machine, which may be described as a wheel placed horizontally, and revolving on its axis by means of steam or hand-labour. Round the rim of the wheel are arranged a series of twenty-nine type boxes. Each of these boxes contains about 500 letters, in groups of seven let-Each of these boxes ters and a space, so arranged as to form logos, parts of words, or perfect words; as "these," "this," "there," "whom," "whose," "would," main," "ress," "ing," "diss," "ton," tout," &c., which words, prefixes, and addenda, make up nearly fifty per cent. of the words used by English writers. As the perforated slip of paper passes about a roller, the holes in it liberate certain pins, which fall into slots, and cause the delivery of the types from the boxes above. This going on continuously, a long line of metal letters collects on the delivery-slab of the machine, which letters are passed on to a slip of brass, and are thence transferred to a galley to be divided into lines, spaced out to the proper width, and made up into columns or pages, by the compositor, in the ordinary way. Though apparently complex, this machine is admirably simple in its operation, and really seems likely to achieve that which all its precursors have missed—success. By its means, types of any size may be composed at the rate of 12,000 an hour about two pages of THE BOOKSELLER, brevier type; the main element of rapidity being found in the fact that the perforator can take words or parts of words at one operation, while in all previous contrivances only a single letter was liberated by pressure on the guiding-key. The Perforator and the Type-composer are distinct and separate machines, so that, though shown together at the Exhibition, they may be worked at a distance from, and quite independently of, each other. The per-forated slips may be used again and again, and when necessary the perforations may be made in duplicate or triplicate. This Type-composer has been in use for a considerable time past at the office of the Warrington Guardian, of which Mr. Mackie is proprietor, and at Messrs. Clay, Sons, and Taylor's, Bread Street Hill, where portions of the Graphic newspaper are composed by its means. All expenses of distribution and making-up included, the cost of composing by this machine is estimated at about 31/2d. per thousand: and it is stated by the patentee that perforators and composers of double speed may be easily pro-duced. The action and capabilities of the Perforator being once understood, the operator, male or female, may prepare the slips at home in the same way as needlework is now done by the sewing machine; or an author might actually perforate his own MSS., and thus ensure correctness. Another advantage belonging to the machine, and which does not seem to have struck the inventor, may be found in the capability of forwarding despatches, secret instructions, and so on, by means of the perforated slips, which could not be possibly translated or read by any persons except those who possessed the key to the mode of perforation, and a machine precisely adapted to

Thus, independent of the latter suggestion, should the anticipations of the inventor be gestion, a profitable and desirable revolution in the printing trade may, in some near or remote period be peacefully effected.

THE COOLIE. - The Author of "Ginx's Baby," Mr. Edward Jenkins, a native of Montreal, will in a few days publish a volume exposing the in a few days publish a volume exposing the atrocities committed upon the helpless immigrants or slaves, called "Coolies," in British Guiana—or slaves, called "Coolies," by British subjects, committed, we regret to say, by British subjects.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES. To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR, A recent number of the BOOKSELLER contained a notice of a volume of the above series, stating that it was "got up in a style similar to previous works in the series—paper, printing, and binding being alike good." I have lately come binding being anke good. I have lately come across another volume of the series, recently issued, "Guesses at Truth," of which you would issued, outside a ratio, of which you would scarcely venture, I think, to write in the same scarcely Whatever may be thought of the paper and binding, there can hardly be two opinions and binding, there can hardly be two opinions about the printing, which appears to be cylinder about the primary and the commonest kind, worked without a set-off sheet, and with ink of the "cheap and set-off sheet," steel of the cannot, however, have been nasty" sort. There cannot, however, have been much of a saving in the latter item, at least twice much being used as was necessary; and most printers would have considered it better to use half the quantity at double the price. The consequence is that "picks" are not unfrequent; the difference in colour is startling at almost every other page; in places the impression is " rotten " the plates are grazed and battered, and the work altogether discreditable. We have heard a good deal of late years about country printers taking away a large portion of the London work. No one can wonder at it who stumbles over such specimens as the one I am referring to; and it is because I fancy there is cause and effect here that I trouble you with this letter.

A PRINTER. June 26, 1871.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW. To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR,—We send you copy of a letter on the "Sunshine and Shadow" case, as you may get others. It came to a lady of this town, and so affected her that she presented us with the book, with very earnest entreaty to sell all we could for the poor man's sake. Yours obediently,

"MADAM, —At the suggestion of a gentleman I send my work, and whatever you could send for it would be truly welcome at the present time, as, through financial difficulties, I am on the verge of bankruptcy, which the sale of my book can alone avert. £100 would remove my difficulties and place me in a pros-perous position. The bailiffs are in possession, and after years of hard work I shall lose all in a few days, unless I pay £20 to induce them to wait. I would only require it as a loan which I would faithfully repay. I would I have tried friends, but failed,—there are no friends in adversity unless you prove one. Trusting you will I have tried trieds, but index,—

Mr. Grote was not only a writer, he was an active politician of the radical school, and also an ardent friend of education: he took a prominent part in the foundation of the London University, and on many subjects, social and political, held opinions much in advance of his age. It was the misfortune of Mr. Grote's history that the price at which it was published placed it beyond the reach of all but rich persons, and even the cheap edition, moderate though it be in price, £3 12s., is yet a sealed book to many thousands of young men who must wait many years before the expiration of copyright enables the Bohns, Routledges, and Warnes to issue it at 10s. or 12s.

Journals Kept in France and Italy, from 1848 With a Sketch of the Revolution of 1848. By the late Nassau William Senior. Edited by his daughter, M. C. M. Simpson. 2 vols. (H. S. King and Co.)—The events of the Revolution of 1848 had almost passed away from the remembrance of the present generation, when the recent insurrection recalled them with vivid distinctness. The parallelism, is in most important particulars complete; and although the results of the terrible outbreak now happily subsiding are more disastrous in aim, and object, and means proposed, both revolutions are similar. Of this the volumes before us give proof. writer of the Journals was at once a lawyer and a politician. He was a lawyer by profession, and a politician by instinct and nature. As a contributor to the Edinburgh Review, and as a man who watched the movements of European affairs for years, he was in communication with the most eminent men of his time; and his habit of registering his opinions and the views he heard from others, gives to what he wrote an authority not possessed by most writers on current events. In 1847, Mr. Senior, whose wanderings had hitherto been confined to Germany and Switzerland, crossed the Alps for the first time, and visited Turin, Genoa, and Venice. On his way to On his way to in Paris. In the England he spent a fortnight in Paris. following February the monarchy fell; and as soon as it was possible he returned to Paris, then in the second act of the Revolution. The journal he then kept forms the material for these volumes. People of all conditions, and of all politics, were known to the diarist. Wherever he went he was received with kindness; and the letters of intro-duction he bore from private friends, and from our own foreign office, had the effect of putting him in communication with the most eminent men and women of the time. The editor informs us he made no secret of the existence of the journals, and, in most cases, the speakers corrected the report of their conversations made by the diarist. What the volumes contain come, therefore, with added weight, inasmuch as they have the imprimatur of those whose opinions and theories are given in the text. It is curious to note how similar were affairs after 1848 to those of our own day. Under date July 20, 1849, there is recorded a conversation with Lamartine. They talked of the chances of war. "He (Lamartine) thinks that peace is in danger from two parties—those who look to foreign war as a source of internal tranquillity, and those who look to it as a source of internal disorder." On the same evening he visited M. Thiers, who spoke with the utmost contempt of the new constitution, and lambed at Reasons the new constitution, and laughed at Bancroft, the minister of the United States, for calling himself a democrat. He said that the agricultural part of the population was inwardly monarchical—not all in the same sense, "but all anti-republican." In a conversation with Dunoyer, one of the Councillors of State, an opinion is expressed which seems as if uttered yesterday. "The French," said Dunoyer, "the French," said Dunoye, "utterly misconceive the purposes for which a government ought to exist; and if that misconceive the misconceive the mill fall from revolution to ception continue, they will fall from revolution to revolution, and from distress to distress, till they end in bankruptcy, anarchy, and barbarism.⁵
There was talk in 1852 of the President, Louis Bonaparte; and Vicomte Lanjuinais, son of the celebrated member of the Convention, who used to see the representative of Napoleonism daily, remarked that "he was not vain or even ambitious in the ordinary sense of the word, but impressed with a perfect conviction that he is destined to end the revolution, and to restore France to prosperity under a Buonaparte dynasty. He is silent, reserved, keeps faithfully the secrets of his different ministers and his own, has perfect courage, physical and moral, and a determination amounting to obstinacy. He has considerable knowledge, and an understanding, not brilliant, certainly, but yet not contemptible." Occasionally, opinions expressed twenty years ago will be found to be delusive, as when M. De Circourt, after rightly predicting that Louis Napoleon would attempt to build his power on the passion in France for equality, added: "He will endeavour to gratify the envy of the common people by abasing all that is eminent, and placing in high places men of whom no one can feel jealous. But this theory of equality necessarily drives him to the rock on which he will perish—universal suffrage." The emergence of the Red Republicans in 1848 and its result, are justly estimated :- "The appearance of the small bodies of men distinguished by red symbols was," says Mr. Senior, "an event of great importance. It marked the formation, out of several elements, of a party which has menaced from that day, the institutions which the Provisional Government and the Constitutional Assembly have endeavoured to give to France; has four or five times been on the point of overthrowing them; has once occasioned them to be susended for six months; and is destined, we believe, ultimately to destroy them." His description of the great hall of the Hôtel De Ville has melancholy interest for us now. On March 17, an event took place much like what has recently occurred: "About one hundred of the leaders of the red clubs were admitted, and received by the Provisional Government in the Great Hall of the Hôtel De Ville, the most historical room now remaining in Paris; the hall in which sat the formidable Commune de Paris; from whose window Henriot was thrown; on whose floor Robespierre lay wounded on the morning of the tenth Thermidor."

It is impossible for us to give an abstract of the two volumes. It is enough to say that Mr. Senior mixed with the most famous and influential men existing from 1848 to 1852, and that he has faithfully recorded what he saw and heard during the time. At the present moment the work has wonderful interest. In the future it will be of great service to the historian.

it will be of great service to the historian.

The Life of John Milton: Narrated in Connection with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of His Time. By David Masson, M.A., LL.D. Vol. 2, 1638 to 1643. (Macmillan.)—Mr. Masson's "Life," of which the second volume, after an interval of years since its predecessor appeared, is now before us, proves the author to be at once a patient and laborious student in the materials for our history during the 17th century. Whether the result justifies the time and trouble he has expended may, perhaps, be doubted. Of Milton, numerous brief lives have at various times been written; as Mr. Masson says, "the number is already past counting." He himself has "been guilty of more than one such." He, however, thought that if anything more was wanted, it seemed to be some much larger and more particular biography, as that which he is now prosecuting. He thought, too, that no one can study the life of Milton as it ought to be studied, without being obliged to study extensively and intimately the contemporary history of England, and even incidentally, of Scotland and Ireland too. Hence the present work. Mr. Masson does not confine his historical inquiries within the precise limits of their demonstrable bearing on the biography, and so "the history assumed a co-ordinate importance by me, was pursued often for its own sake, and became, though always with a sense of organic relation to the biography, continuous in itself." The present volume is composed of four books, the first of which resumes the History at the date 1638, and the Life at the time when the poet returned from his continental travels, an event which almost exactly coincides with the reception of Charles the First by the Londoners, after his unsuccessful northern expedition. volume extends only to the year 1643, so that we have no fewer than 608 pages devoted to a narrative of five years. If, therefore, the whole life is to be continued on the same scale, it will require six more volumes of the same size to bring us to sure whether Mr. Masson's plan is to be approved. Milton never occupied that central position of importance which makes it necessary that we should have far-off facts explained to us before we are capable of understanding the man. That there are far-off facts the author himself admits, by informing the reader that the table of contents will enable him "to select or to omit;" but a work such as this should be ought not to admit of skipping. However, Mr. Masson has his own scheme, and it must be confessed he carries it out admirably. We have a clear and full account of the public events, political and ecclesiastical, of the time, and of the most prominent men. Much is old, but a great portion, and that not the least valuable, is new. The events of the Scottish Presbyterian revolt, the first two years under the Long Parliament, the commencement of the Civil War, the state of English Presbyterianism and English Independency, are all fully described alongside of the record of the poet's life and work during the same period. The style is always clear and intelligible, but often jerky and spasmodic; and sometimes reminding us of the preaching of a defunct class of Welsh Methodists. Exclamations, notes of interrogation, and other similar vicious literary blemishes too frequently occur; and Mr. Masson occasionally goes beyond his record, and intermasson occasionally goes beyond his record, and instead of history gives a romance. For instance, in describing the great founder of Rhode Island, Roger Williams, he says: "Let the reader fancy him," Ac., and then proceeds to paint the fancy nim, &c., and then proceeds to paint the fancy picture; and speaking of Milton in Aldersgate Street, when Prince Rupert arrived in London, he fancies if the door had then been broken open, "the Cavalier Captain might have exclaimed, 'O ho! Pindar and Euripides are all very well, by G-? . . . but neither Pindar nor Euripides ever wrote pamphlets against the Church of England, by G—! It won't do, Mr. Milton!' Again, the reasoning is not always logical. He fancies "at some time or other during his life, and by some means or other, Milton had acquired some practical knowledge of drill and of military forms and manceuvres," because "there are passages in Paradize Lost which prove to me that Milton knew the pike-manual, company and battalion drill, and something of officers' work at parade and review, and also of artillery practice." After this we shall hear Shakespere was a carrier, because he knew the manners and custom of carriers.

Our Living Poets. An Essay on Criticism. By H. Buxton Forman. (Tinsley Brothers.)—The most noticeable feature in this volume is the high enthusiasm exhibited by the author for Miss Smedley and her poems. If Mr. Forman had not dedicated the work to his wife, we should be so cruel as to infer that the writer had personal regard for Miss Smedley. He certainly rates

what she has contributed to our literature too highly. There are other poets in the list he gives who are also rated too highly; but the continual mention of Miss Smedley's name is an outrage upon the criticisms of poetry which have preceded the present writer's volume. Mr. divides his subject into four sections. Mr. Forman divides his subject into four sections. He is of opinion there are two "schools" of poets, and two "groups." The "schools" comprise Mr. Alfred Tennyson, Miss Menella Bute Smedley, and Miss Jean Ingelow as idyllic poets; and Mr. Robert Browning, Mr. W. W. Story, and Mrs. Augusta Webster as psychological poets. Then comes the Præraphaelite "group," which includes not only Mr. Dante Rossetti and his sister, but Mr. Coventry Patmore and Mr. Thomas Woolner: and Coventry Patmore and Mr. Thomas Woolner; and lastly, the Renaissance "group," at the head of which is Mr. Matthew Arnold. We must say at which is Mr. Matthew Arnold. once we do not think Mr. Forman's apprehension of poetry to be very just. This division is not, on the whole, wrong. We should not deny, for inthe whole, wrong. We should not deny, for instance, that Miss Smedley is of the idyllic "school," and that Mr. Swinburne and Mr. Morris are of the Renaissance "group;" but we object to Mr. Forman's estimate, and the ground of his estimate. In judging of the poets included in his list, reference should, we think, be made not in their relation to the "school" or "group" to which they are assigned, but to their general excellence as poets. We judge a poet by the qualities he possesses which are common to all poets, and not by those which fit him to belong to a particular "school" or "group." Mr. Forman does not see this. He classifies his poets, and proceeds to discuss them in relation to their merits in the class he has assigned them. There is much good sense in the volume—some of the criticisms are pregnant with good sense and meaning—but there is much with which we cannot agree. The author, for instance, tells us that Tennyson's "In Memoriam," usually regarded as no more than a collection of lyrics in one metre, is not seen as a "single chiselled masterpiece with a vital oneness connecting all its parts." He supposes that "the poem gives expression to the sequent phases of a genuine passion with the consequent coolness of a mere study; but it is hard to relinquish, when once conceived, the idea that the poem gives expression to the sequent phases on a genuine passion felt by one man towards another separated from him by death." Those who usually regard the "In Memoriam" as no more than a "collection of lyrics in one metre" will be surprised to the total control of the separated by the separated by the separated by the separate of the separate will be surprised to see the unity, especially if they knew the fact that much at present in the poem was written previous to the death of Arthur Hallam, whom it celebrates. Again, Mr. Forman congratulates himself that Mr. Swinburne did not include in his "Songs before Sunrise" the famous "Intercession" for the Emperor of the French, which was published in the Fortnightly Review, in 1869, and would fain hope that the absence of the poem from the collection is evidence of the poet's "humane scrupulousness in regard to the man fallen from his high estate." The fact is, that "Intercession" has no relation to "Songs before Sunrise" and that it may entire them other Sunrise," and that it was omitted from other reasons than "humane scrupulousness." Mr. Forman's estimate of the men and women passed under his review has fewer faults than most similar collections; but it is far from being adequate. unduly exalts some—as Miss Smedley and Mr. Woolner—and unduly depreciates others. Still, to that large class of readers who are unable to make themselves acquainted, first-hand, with the productions of our modern poets, the work is a valuable introduction. The author has evidently paid careful attention and loving care on his work; and, where he fails, it is not from want of study or knowledge, but from want of judgment. large proportion of the volume has already appeared in periodicals. Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus. Translated from the Original Sanskrit. By Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A. In two vols. Edition. (Trübner and Co.). - After many years we have a third edition of this work, which is valuable from the insight it gives us into the manners and sentiments of our Indian fellow-subjects. Previous to the publication of these specimens we had no fair samples of Hindu dramatic literature. The few dramas which had been translated were so similar in character that they afforded only a limited view of the Hindu Theatre. Mr. Wilson, however, has collected his specimens from a large variety of schools, so as to include every type of composition. The Hindu drama being romantic rather than classical, is seldom found in conformity with the unities of time, place, and action. dialogue, varying from the simple to the elaborate, is sometimes the language of ordinary conversation, and sometimes that of high poetic refinement. None of the plays at present known can claim a great antiquity, and several of them are comparatively modern, although the greater part of each is written in Sanskrit. Each specimen given in this collection is preceded by an introduction, explaining those incidents and allusions which are likely to be unintelligible to the English reader. Mr. Wilson has also given us an elaborate essay on the dramatic system of the Hindus, which prepares the reader's mind for the plays that follow. In an appendix of considerable length we have short accounts of all the different plays, and these supply explanations of the plots, and summaries of the acts and scenes. also a complete list of Hindu plays, including those which are still only to be found in the original, as well as those translated. It is the aim of the present translation to give the Hindu drama a place in English literature; and it is certain that to all lovers of dramatic art these volumes must prove highly interesting, as they reveal to the European a life which is wholly new to him, traditions which are gradually being forgotten, and customs which are growing obsolete in our great Indian empire. They afford us glimpses of society such as no history could furnish.

An Historical View of Literature and Art in Great Britain. From the Accession of the House of Hanover to the Reign of Queen Victoria. By J. Murray Graham, M. A. (Longmans.)— Mr. Graham is right in his belief that an account of a nation's literature is entitled to consideration as an important part of its general history. literary and æsthetic development of the national thought and taste is, we confess, too often ignored or treated in a too summary way in ordinary histories, the material of which is usually composed of a connected narrative of "public events, their motives, incidents, and results." But we do not think Mr. Graham's volume an altogether satisfactory corrective. This aim is to remedy "the inconvenience arising from so much want of connection in the sources of our knowledge of the literature and art of Britain, as developed in their finer and more popular forms during the most recent periods of its annals." He handles the several branches of his subject separately, and thus literature, architecture, painting, and sculp-lure, in appropriate sub-divisions, have each a section devoted to it, so that the reader may turn to that particular book in which he happens to be most interested. Whilst, however, approving his motive and agreeing with his method, we do not admit that Mr. Graham has been as successful in his treatment as it is possible for a writer with such a subject to be. He has faults of style which are obvious; he is occasionally very dull and prosy; and, in the implicit and explicit criticism which he sometimes gives, his judgment does not appear to be wholly trustworthy. His mood is judicial—he is clearly impartial—but his errors arise from want of insight rather than want of will to be fair. Simply as an historical view, however, of the subject, he has produced a wel-come addition to our literature. The chief events and the chief personages of the period are noted, and the student will find in the book an abstract which will give a comprehensive view of the literary and art results since the accession of George I. Literary composition and works of art are referred to in their several divisions in chronological sequence, and it is evident the author has not confined himself in reference to works easily accessible, but has given himself the trouble to consult others more recondite. The introductory chapter on the condition, at the period of the accession of the House of Hanover, of literature and literary men, and of architecture, painting, and sculpture, without containing anything original or unknown to men of ordinary education, is yet an interesting review of those days when a cloud fell upon them all. We do not fail to notice the author's affectation of styling well-known men as "Mr." Gibbon, Hume, Gray, Moore, Southey, Coleridge, &c., do not now require a handle to their names. Let us add, there is a good index to the volume, and useful sideheadings accompany the text.

The Annals of Our Time. A Diurnal of Events, Social and Political, Home and Foreign, from the Accession of Queen Victoria. By Joseph Irving. "Diurnal," in which the record of events is brought down to the peace of Versailles, on February 28th of the present year. Of a work of this sort the tvalue will, of course, depend upon the judgment and discrimination of the compiler in assorting his materials. He should exactly know the distinction between trivial and enduringly-important events; he should be impartial; he should be able to condense without being obscure; and, above all, he should not exhibit bias towards any particular class of facts. In most of these particulars Mr. Irving has proved himself to be capable. As a summary of world-history from the year 1837 to our day, the work will be found highly meritorious. It is at once accurate and interesting. The Obituary, British Parliamentary Proceedings, Public Meetings, Trials, Shipwrecks, Murders, Riots, Fires, Colliery Explosions, are sections to which much care and attention have been paid; and, in this respect, the volume is a valuable work of reference. Political facts, too, receive their share of attention; but we think there is room for amendment in the way in which great social and intellectual and artistic movements are recorded. We see, for instance that "Punch" was started in 1841, but we cannot discover when Darwin's "Origin of Species" made its appearance. Again, some statesmen and men of letters have devoted to them scores of references; but, on turning to the name of Lord Lytton, we find his lordship described as "Lytton, Sir E. B.," and the only political event in his life mentioned is a speech in volume like this should be clear and complete, has numerous defects. Under the heading "Libel

Cases" we find "Strauss v. Athenæum, 526-764, but on referring to page 526 we discover the case matic works a "Letter to John Bull, comedy "Not so Bad as we Seem," are the only publications alluded to. The index, which in a to be Eastwood against the same journal. The grammar, to), of the work is not always according to the established laws of the Queen's English. Under date 13th March, 1849, we were slightly surprised to find the following reference:—"Duel at Paris, between MM. Ledru Rollin and Denjoy; neither were wounded." Notwithstanding the defects we have pointed out, and those only indicated, a close examination enables us to say that the "Annals of our Time," as a comprehensive record of the incidents which make up history, is in plan and execution of great and enduring value. We shall look for future editions of the work.

A Century of Scottish Life. Memorials and Recollections of Historical and Remarkable Per-Memorials and sons, with Illustrations of Caledonian Humour. By the Rev. Charles Rogers, LL.D., Historiographer to the Historical Society of Great Britain. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—Here is a book to enjoy,-whether at home or abroad, in the house or in the garden, at all times, and in all seasons,-by those who are really capable of enjoying unaffected humour and pleasant anecdote. Dr. Rogers says of Sydney Smith's remark-quoted till it has become stale-that to get a joke into a Scotchman's head required a get a joke into a secondaria man required a surgical operation, may apply to jests formed on mere word-playing, "but not to those of higher humour;" for "Scottish wit consists of a scintillation of ideas." And in proof of this had allow the contract of illustrating from the contract he gives us scores of illustrations from the sayings writings of divines, poets, historians, novelists, professors, lawyers, and peasants. He has done good service to his country by the publication of this, his fourth work on Caledonian life and manners. Before reading Dr. Scott's "Recollections" and Dean Ramsay's "Reminiscences" we, in common with thousands of Englishmen, had but a confused and imperfect notion of the wealth of wit and dry humour that existed among the Scots, combined with a hearty generosity and abounding benevolence. Its anecgenerosity and abounding benevoience. Its unec-dotes are derived principally from materials col-lected by Dr. Thomas Buchanan, Minister of Methyen, in Perthshire, from his own recollec-tions and those of his father; with some few extracts from Dr. Henry Scott's "Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane." Among the eminent men with whom Dr. Rogers was personally intimate and of whom Dr. Rogers was personally intimate, and of whom a variety of characteristic anecdotes are recorded a variety of characteristic anecdotes are recorded are—Professor Gillespie and Dr. George Cook, of St. Andrew's; Sir David Brewster; Dr. David Irving, Author of "Lives of the Scotish Poets;" Dr. Dick, Author of "The Christian Philosopher;" Dr. Livingstone, Professor George Wilson, Dr. James Robertson, Hugh Miller, Sir Archibald Alison, Professor Aytoun, Sir James Simpson, Professor Wilson, Canon Melvill, and Robert Chambers; while among Scottish bards and litterateurs, we find frequent mention of Burns, Scott, Motherwell. frequent mention of Burns, Scott, Motherwell, Macpherson, Allan Cunningham, and James Hogg, the "Ettrick Shepherd." Dr Rogers was very intimate with Mrs. Hogg and her family; and it was mainly through his instrumentality that she procured a pension; a like service having been who died only last year, at the ripe age of fourscore, was, we are told, "an admirable woman. Judicious in household administration, she devoted herself to the husband's comfort, and to the proper upbringing of her children. Shepherd's profuse hospitality had subjected her to some inconvenience, and his personal habits were not quite conformable with her tastes. But she never uttered a complaint; only on one subject she felt keenly: she conceived that her husband's reputation was endangered by the words and acts attributed to him in the Noctes of 'Blackwood's Magazine;' and she insisted that those papers should be stopped. With her husband's poetical designation she had no sympathy; she always spoke of him as Mr. Hogg." volume is full of like reminiscences; and not a small part of the reader's pleasure will be derived from the style in which the narratives and brief biographies are told; though here and there we notice small Scotticisms, such as: "I do not recollect of" for I lo not remember. Nor will all Englishmen agree with his estimate of Burns, nor accept the statement that his countrymen, "amidst all their enthusiasm, have not been very systematic in the acknowledgment of his claims." These, however, are but minor points, and detract nothing from the merits of the book, which is charming, from title-page to finis.

The New Hand-Book of Ireland. An Illustrated Guide for Tourists and Travellers. James Godkin and John A. Walker. (Dublin: Steam Printing Company. London: Simpkin and Marshall.)—Mr. Godkin is known as a clever journalist and special correspondent; Mr. Walker as hon. secretary to the Dublin International Exhibitions of 1864-5. Between them they have produced a very readable, entertaining, and trust-worthy account of the sister island. With this worthy account of the sister island. With this book in hand, and a few pounds in his pocket, the tourist may soon make himself familiar with the various features of beauty and interest with which the country abounds. The several chapters are arranged conveniently for trips from Dublin and the principal towns in each county; and in an appendix are given the railway, stage-coach, car, and steamboat regulations; while throughout the text will be found ample information as to hotel accommodation. Indeed, of the eighteen chromo-lithographic illustrations given, nine of them are pictures of hotels. The authors have freely availed themselves—never, however, without acknowledgment—of the labours of Dr. Waller, Mr. Brewer, Mr. Crawford, and many other writers on Ireland; but when they speak for themselves, they do so with precision and no small amount of candour. Thus, they think that the late Mr. Guinness would have done better to have built an entirely new cathedral than to have restored St. Patrick's, standing, as it does, in the lowest and most disreputable part of the city, "notorious for dirt and disorder," only partially abolished by the efforts of the parish officers and the police since the visitation of the cholera. Again, speaking of the jaunting cars, they say there is "great room for improvement in the dress and appearance of the drivers, who would do more credit to their country if they were better acquainted with the chemical properties of soap, and the virtues of the Vartry water." Few visitors to the Lakes will disagree with their estimate of Killarney, as "the most beggarly town in Ireland," where, "under pretence of selling one thing or another, the poor inhabitants manage to mar the enjoyment of visitors in no small degree by their persistent attempts to extort money." In their notices of Kingstown, Bray, Howth Castle, Killiney Hill, the Wicklow Mountains, Blarney Castle, the Giants' Causeway, and other show-places in Ireland, they exhibit a commendable love of beauty, and, in their descriptions of scenery, sometimes nearly approach elo-quence. The volume, which is admirably printed, is prefaced by a capital map of the country, so arranged as to show the distances from place to place at a glance.

Rambles of an Archaologist among Old Books and in Old Places. Being Papers on Art in relation to Archæology, Painting, Art-Decoration, and Art-Manufacture. By Frederick William Fairholt, F.S.A. (Virtue and Co.)—There is no connexion between the various papers which make up this volume Each subject is, however, patient and accomplished antiquary, have considerable value. They were specially written for the Art Journal; and the illustrations, improved from original sketches by the author, have the merits of being accurate and really interpreting the text. The subjects treated of are five. First, we have a general resume of ancient, mediæval, and renaissance art, in which those unacquainted with the subject will find an interesting and trustworthy account of the various art processes employed during the several periods; next comes a curious paper on "Grotesque Design as exhibited in Ornamental and Industrial Art;" "Facts about Finger Rings," in which every fact of interest concerning the subject seems embodied, follows; then we have an account of "Ancient Brooches and Dress Fastenings;" and, finally, we are presented with an admirable sketch of Albert Dürer, his works, his compatriots, and his times. As a handbook of the subjects treated, it is the best we know. It is written in popular style, and illustrated with the skill of a man who was a good draughtsman and an accomplished antiquary.

The Nile Without a Dragoman. By Frederick Eden. (Henry S. King and Co.)—"Murray's Handbook to Egypt,' is," says Mr. Eden, "admirable in its knowledge of Egypt 4,000 years ago ... but desparingly vague as to the state of affairs existing." This description is by no means applicable to "The Nile Without a Dragoman," for there is scarcely a reference to the needs at the state of the needs at the state of the needs at the state of the needs at the past at all, except to qualify the very readable and amusing narrative. Seldom has the truth of the axiom that the sum of life is made up of "un-considered trifles," been more easy to comprehend than by the light of the experience gained by the perusal of this recital of a Nile voyage, without the aid of a "dragoman," which, as our readers are aware, is the title of that wonderful personage, a manager, steward, and guide, rolled into one. The idea of "doing" the Nile economically was the prime reason of that important functionary being dispased with the other reading My being dispensed with; but, after reading Mr. Eden's book, we should fancy much of the experience and insight into Egyptian manners and customs he has gained and made public, would have been unobtainable under the usual circumstances of the Nile Trip.

Songs of the Sierras, By Joaquin Miller. (Longmans.)—Written in the wilds of the great West, these verses possess more merit than even their author seems to believe. There is something their author seems to believe. thing in the Preface to this volume which bespeaks attention to the poems and their creator.
Walled from the world by seas on the one hand (he tells us), and by the Sierra Nevada mountains in savage grandeur, on the other, the heart would sometimes hunger after a gentler life, and the soul go out after her sweet ideal, . . . and bring back dreams, and with them clothe facts taken from the lips of mountain men as they sat and told them around their camp and cabin fires The city of Mexico was my Mecca, and San Francisco, to me, a marvel of magnificence and civilization. This last summer I crossed the Rocky Mountains, and for the first time saw New York—a great place for cheap books, and a big den of small thieves. . . . I hesitate to confess these facts . . but feeling that the book must have crudities apparent to the cultivated, but which

I cannot now correct, I think it due. . . . Where this is written, rhyming is considered a mild type of insanity; and the reading of a MS. to a stranger an assault with wilful intent to do bodily harm. . . I almost feel then that an apology is due for the bold act of a nameless young man, but poetry is a passion that defies reason . . . and, after all, if a sincere man has anything to say, why shall he not say it?" Why indeed! And Mr. Miller has here said a good many things that were worth the saying. He has told us wild Indian tales, in verse that lacks neither power nor pathos; and more than that, has even introduced some poetic images and descriptive scenes that at least possess the charm of novelty, Especially in the second poem, "With Walker in Nicaragua," he displays considerable dramatic skill; while in the "Tall Alcade," he shows himself a pupil of the true school, neither sacrificing sense to sound, nor overloading his narrative with words for the mere

The Two Brothers, and other Poems. By Edward Henry Bickers(eth, M.A. (Rivingtons.)-Most of the poems here collected were written many years ago, and many of them have already appeared in print. They are now collected, with the addition of several new pieces, for the use of friends "who kindly continue to ask for them." They contain evidences of much tenderness and delicacy of feeling, and are mostly correct in rhythm. Hymns and Chancellor's "Prize Poems" form a good portion of the bulk of the volume.

The Works of Virgil rendered into English Prose. By James Lonsdale, M.A., and Samuel Lee, M.A. (Globe edition: Macmillan.)—As a "crib" for schoolboys, and as a version of the bard of Mantua suitable for giving English readers unacquainted with Latin an adequate opinion of the original, this volume is to be highly recommended. It is a literal rendering in prose, in which paraphrase has been altogether avoided, and is thus suitable for students; and, at the same time, the editors have made an attempt to give a reflection of the style of the original. Some amount of rhythm in the structure of the sentences has therefore been generally maintained; and where in the Latin the sound of the words is an echo to the sense (as so frequently happens in Virgil), an attempt has been made to produce the same result in English. Messrs. Lonsdale and Lee have been generally successful in accomplishing their somewhat difficult aim. In addition to the text, we have an admirable general Introduction, devoted to the life and works of Virgil, and the Eclogues, the Georgics, and the Æneid are each prefaced by a special introduction, while a running analysis, incorporated in the text, gives in few words the subject treated by the poet.

value of any number of articles from one to upwards of 4,000 at same prices: to which are added extensive tables of interest, commission, discount, and wages, &c., &c. By Edward Arthur King, accountant, Beccles.—The contents are correctly described in the title-page of this apparently well compiled and useful

From Messrs. Baillière, Tindall, and Cox :— The Desideratum of Electricity, made plan and useful by a "Lover of Mankind and Common Sense;" the desideratum being the curative, as opposed to the speculative, value of electricity.

From Messrs. Bell and Daldy:—The Works of Matthew Prior. Edited by the Rev. John Mitford. Being two new volumes of the cheap re-issue of the elegant Aldine edition of the British Poets

From Messrs. Bemrose and Sons :- The Schoolmaster's Drill Assistant; a manual, by Commander F. M. Norman, R.N., for the use of elementary schools, by aid of which any master may instruct his pupils in the simplest and most useful parts of military drill, and other useful exercises; with a large number of explanatory diagrams, and a good "march-

Ing song."
From Messrs, Blackie and Sons:—An Elementary Treatise on Natural Philosophy. By A. Privat Dechanel, Inspector of the Academy of Paris; translated and edited by J. D. Everett, Professor of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College, Belfast; in 4 parts, of which this, on "Heat," forms Part II., with 151 engravings, principally from drawings by the editor, illustrative of the theory of thermo-dynamics.

From the Book Society: - Songs of Gladness; a hymn book for the young, well printed and strongly bound, with a good index of first lines.

From Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin :- The Boys' and Girls Fourth Reader, adapted to the requirements of the Revised Code; being the fourth standard in Cassell's Primary Series, containing reading lessons in prose and verse, with spelling and dictation exer-

in prose and verse, with spetting and dictation exercises, adapted for the junior classes.

Part I., "Leaving the vale of Hebron;" Part III., "Confirmation;" Part III., "Original Sin;" three of a series of pamphlets intended for the period of voting people about to be tended for the perusal of young people about to be confirmed.

From Mr. H. M. Gilbert, Southampton :- The Romance of Sir Bevis of Hamtoun, newly done into English prose from the metrical version, the MS. of which was preserved by Lord Auchinleck, father to James Boswell, the biographer of Dr. Johnson. By Eustace Hinton Jones. Sir Bevis of Southampton was a knight, living in the time of William the Conqueror, of whom many wonderful things are toldin this little book his history it given in detail.

From Messrs. Charles Griffin and Co.:—Spenser and his Poetry. The first volume of the well-known work, by the late Professor Craik, now added to the cheap and excellent re-issue of "Bell's British Poets."

Desired Works Voles and Poets. Cheap and excellent re-issue of Delt's Bittish Focis.

—Chaucer's Poetical Works, Vols. 7 and 8, completing this edition—the best—of the Father of English Poetry

From Messrs Hamilton, Adams, and Co. :- Will the Earth Become a Sun-Spot 1 An explanation of the plan of laws of the solar system. By Robert Holmes, author of "Kind Words to all Classes."

From Mr. J. C. Hotten: -The Story of Count Bismarck's Life; a biography compiled, with much judgment, for popular perusal, by Mr. George Bullen, Judgment, for popular perusal, by sar, George Bullen, of the British Museum.—Lothaw, a burlesque, with caricature cuts, by Mr. Benjamins, otherwise Bret Harte, of Mr. Disraeli's Novel of "Lothair," in which that remarkable young gentleman is seen under cir-cumstances that would be questionable if they were not irresistibly ludicrous.—Epistle to the Deil. By Holy Willie of Prussia.

And Love o' Power's a mighty spell,
Has wrought mair wae than tongue can tell:
What wrangs are done, what murders fell,
When by it driven!
Twas love o' power that peopled hell,
And lost thee heaven!

-The Story of Alsace and Lorraine, and how they were lost by Germany. The author argues that these provinces have ever been German at heart, and that France never possessed any other rights than those of unlawful possession.

From Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton: -Positivism; a lecture delivered in connexion with the Christian Evidence Society, by the Rev. W. Jackson, M.A., late Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford.—The Alleged Historical Difficulties of the Old and New Testiments; a lecture by the Rev. George Rawlinson, W. Corden Perfer of Antione History, Oxford M.A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford.

—The Work of the Christian Preachers. By the —The Work of the Christian Preachers. By the Rev. Thomas Jones, of Swansea; an address delivered from the Chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, at the Annual Meeting, on the 9th of May last.—The Piccolo Precettore; a new edition of Mr. F. Grandineau's First Steps to Italian Conversation, intended for the use of schools, with additional exercises, arranged upon a capital plan.—
The Great Social Evil; its causes, extent, results, and remedies. By William Logan, author of "Moral Statistics of Glasgow;" an important question ably discussed.—Young Men and Maidens; a pastoral for the times, by J. Baldwin Brown; sermons delivered by the author at his church at Brixton, and now republished for the benefit of a larger, but not, possibly, a more appreciative audience.
From Messrs. Houlston and Sons:-

Echoes for the Little Ones. By E. Smith. A capital first-book for children, beginning with an illustrated alphabet, and passing on to easy and interesting reading lessons, with spelling exercises at the end of each.

From Messrs. H. S. King and Co .: - Freedom in the Church of England. Six Sermons suggested by the Voysey Judgment, preached in St. James's Chapel, York Street. By the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, Hon. Chaplain to the Queen.—Notes on Some of the Pic-tures in the Royal Academy. By an Art Critic, who shows considerable acumen in discovering the pictures that are really worth examining, and no little pleasant severity occasionally, as when, in noticing a landscape, he asks, "Does it kindle any emotion?" Except that it appeals to a sense of truth, what landscape does?

scape does? From Messrs. Lockwood and Co.:—Cictro's Oration for Sextus Roscius of Ameria. Edited, with an introduction, analysis, and critical notes, by the Rev. James Davies, of Moor Court, and formerly scholar of Lincoln College, Oxford; forming the latest addition to "Weale's Classical Series."

From Messrs. Longman:—The Second Book of Dryden's Aenid of Virgil. Edited by Walter M'Leod. A most useful book for students in Train-

A most useful book for students in Train-M'Leod. ing Schools and Colleges, and for self-teachers; schools and Colleges, and to search and easily understood sections.—A Few Brief Remarks on Cambridge University and College Reform; in reference to past and present legislation. By a Member of the Senate.

From Messrs. Maclachlan and Stewart, Edinburgh :- Facts and Fallacies relative to the Scottish Churches and Schools; twelve tracts for the times, addressed to the Hon. Lord Ardmillan and the Rt. Hon. George Young, M.P., Lord Advocate of Scotland. By "Free Lance," sometime President of the Edin-burgh University Dialectic Society, and author of the "Future Church of Scotland," &c.; a trenchant pamphlet on church reform.

From Messrs. John Menzies and Co., Edinburgh:

—Book-Keeping by Double Entry, exemplified in a simple set of books for the use of retail dealers, and a plan for a manager's check-book for testing the intromissions of salesmen in all businesses in which goods are sold by weight, measure, or number. By

James Nelson, accountant, of Glasgow.
From Mr. Murby:—A practical help for teaching
English Composition. By B. E. S. Drake Bigsby.—
Murby's New First Exectsion Reader, consisting wholly of original contributions from practical teachers. -Murby's Scripture Manuals. Joshua and Judges. Intended for students preparing for the Oxford and ambridge local and other examinations.—An Easy Elementary Course of Latin. Part 3. Congregation of verbs. By William Dodds.

From Mr. W. P. Nimmo:—The Oncen's Message; or, Twenty Words for a Shilling. Being a popular exposition of the system of postal telegraphs, and a practical guide to the senders and receivers of messages. A popular exposition of the telegraph system.

From Mr. D. Nutt: — The Practical Linguist. By David Nasmyth, being a system based entirely upon natural principles of learning to speak, read, and write the English language.—A New Practical and Easy German Grammar. By August Meyer. The great difficulty with English learners is the German alphabet, in which several letters are so nearly alike as to be almost identical.

From Mr. Amos Osborne:—An Appeal to Our Countrymen; or, The Wreck of Great, Britain. By Sylvanus.

From Messrs. James R. Osgood.--That Heathen hince. By Bret Harte; with illustrations by S. Chinee. Eytinge, jun. If anything could add to the humour of this poem, it would be the illustrations, which, in their fidelity to nature—that is, Californian nature—seem to be worthy of Truthful James himself. The portrait of Ah Sin, with the "smile that was childlike and bland," is, in its way, as graphic as Seymour's portrait of Mr. Pickwick.

From Messrs. James Parker and Co.:—National Health. By Henry W. Acland, M.D., F.R.S., containing the substance of a lecture delivered in the Royal College of Physicians, with an appendix of documents then referred to, but now reprinted in idll.—This is My Body, a sermon preached before the University at St. Mary's, Oxford, on the fifth Sunday after Easter of this year, by the Rev. Dr. Pusey, in which the doctrine of the Real Presence, over which so many earnest men stumble and dispute, is explained and advocated.

From Messrs. George Philip and Son:—The History and Literature of the Stuart Period, to the accession of William and Mary. By J. Davies, of the London University. Adapted for schools and selfteachers.

From the Religious Tract Society:—Thoughts for the Evening of Life: a sketch of the life of the late Rev. Dr. Henry Grey, Moderator of the Second General Assembly of Scotland, in 1844, with passages from the diary of Mrs. Grey, edited from the Sunday at Home magazine, by the Rev. C. M. Birrell; with a striking portrait of Dr. Grey, from a photograph taken a lew months before his death, in 1859.—Bright Rays for Dark Dare a volume for the afflicted, in Rays for Dark Days, a volume for the afflicted, in fourteen well-written chapters. — How Little Bessie Kept the Wolf from the Door, a pretty story for girls, forming the first of a series of shilling volumes for the young; the design being to produce attractive books of travel and advanture, elethers of natural books of travel and adventure, sketches of natural history, poems, &c., each volume complete in itself, and illustrated by woodcuts or coloured engravings.

From Mr. W. Ridgway:—The Overthrow of the French Army: its prelude and its cause; an essay in which the whole course of the France-German war, from the first breaking out of hostilities, just twelve months ago, to the Peace of Paris, is graphically told, with some apt remarks, here and there, upon Prussian discipline and French disorganization
"folly and weakness," says the author, "opposed to wisdom and strength."

From Messrs. Rivington and Co. :- The Way of Life. A book of prayers and instructions for the young, compiled by a priest, edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter. Intended as a manual of devotion intermediate between the "Star of Childhood" and the "Treasury of Devotion."— The Tenure of Fellowship, consideration. considered in reference to college tutors and lecturers, by the Rev. H. A. Morgan, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Jesus College, Cambridge; an argument for the widening of the area of collegiate education and the removal of the rule whereby celibacy is enforced upon Fellows of Colleges. - The Ober-Ammergau Passion Play, reprinted from the Times, with remarks on the origin and development of miracle-plays; by the Rev. Malcolm Mac Coll, M.A., chaplain to Lord Napier. Visitors to that little town in Bavaria, in which the Passion Play is at this very time in process of per-formance, will do well to read this interesting pamphlet, in which they will find many really practical bints.

From Messrs. John Ross and Co.:—The Lady of Lake. By Sir Walter Scott. An elegant! the Lake. An elegantly printed edition, with Notes and Analytical and Explanatory Index.

From Mr. John L. Sherriff, Sydney, New Sout I Wales:—Observations on the Public Affairs and Public Men of England. In five letters. By Davi of Buchanan, Barrister-at-Law, and M.P. for Sydney, written in London during a recent visit of the author, and printed in the Australian Newspapers. They comprise sketches of Messrs. Gladstone, Disraeli, Bright, Lowe, and other eminent statesmen, with an interesting account of an interview with Mr. Carlyle, which the philosopher of Chelsea may probably not be displeased to see in print.

From Messrs. Smith and Elder :- Antonina ; or, The Fall of Rome. By Wilkie Collins. Being the most recent addition to Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co.'s cheap editions of popular works.

From Messrs. J. and T. Spencer, Leicester: Sanitary Enquiry into the Probable Causes of Epidemics in England, as observed at Leicester. By Richard Weaver, C.E. Having made the enquiry, Mr. Weaver has also answered the question. can be no longer any doubt respecting the causes of epidemics at Leicester. That town apparently is in a chronic state of typhus.

From Mr. William Stevens:—Hints to Mothers on the management of children in infancy, childhood, youth, and womanhood, by Aunt Peggy; with an appendix containing the rules for the general management of infants, recommended by the Obstetrical Society of London. The substance of this little work first appeared in the Family Herald, when it attracted considerable attention. It should be very widely circulated amongst mothers of all ranks.

From Mr. Elliot Stock:—Britons, Franks, and Teutons; a few remarks addressed to the lads of Britain, by an old Frank; from which it will be seen that Ludovic the Frank is not the quarrelsome fellow he has been represented to be; what Wilhelm the Teuton really is, has always been, and ever will be; and how John the Briton did wrong his best friend and neighbour." Another, and not the least pithy, of the "Dame Europa's School" pamphlets.

From Mr. Tegg: Life of Robert Burns. By John Gibson Lockhart. A new edition with notes of the death of the poet's widow, and a memoir of the author. Fcap. 8vo. One of the best and most readable of the many lives published of Scotland's great bard.—Also a new edition of An Antidote to the Miseries of Human Life, in the History of the Widow Placid and her Daughter Rachel. By Harriet Corp. A tenth edition of this work appeared in 1824, so that it may be presumed to be a work of some merit, and, although a little out of date in the year 1871, there are many points upon which the opinions of 1824 are still the same.

From Messrs. Trübner and Co.:—The Prevention of War: A Plan and a Plea. By Edward Hanson. To which is added Electoral Qualification, by Thomas Single. The arguments against war are, if men were only wise enough to accept them, very convincing; and the theory of electoral qualification will be admitted by all; though many may demur to the author's conclusion, that while a cheap press has done infinite good, the prevalence of "vile publications" is doing immense harm. Is there such a prevalence?

From Messrs. F. Warne and Co. :- A Classical Geography, for the use of junior classes. By H. Musgrave Wilkins, M.A., Fellow of Merton College. Oxford. In this volume much care has been taken to identify ancient cities and names, with their modern localities and designations.—Accompanying this is the Junior Classic Allas, consisting of eight maps, coloured—the world as known to the ancients, Italy. Grecce and its islands, Asia Minor, France, and Great Britain; the two works supplying an acknow-ledged want in a very efficient manuer.—I Cookery Book for the Million. Compiled and edited by Mary Jewry. Sixty-four closely printed pages for on e

From Messrs. Whittaker and Co.:—Döllinger on the Infallibility of the Pope. A letter addressed to the Archbishop of Munich, by J. Von Döllinger, D. D., in explanation of his position touching the Dogma of the Papal Infallibility.

12, STATIONERS' HALL COURT, LONDON,

July 1st, 1871.

Immediately after the Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Bill, which has now been read a third time in the House of Commons, has received the Royal Assent, Messrs. Rivington will be prepared to supply

THE PRAYER BOOK & BOOK OF CHURCH SERVICES,

CONTAINING THE

New Cables of Lessons.

Until the "Table of Lessons Bill" had passed the Houses of Parliament, Messrs. Rivington did not think it necessary to print and issue an Unauthorized Book, therefore all the Cambridge Editions of the Book of Church Services will be found to be accurate and to contain all Amendments and Alterations agreed to by Parliament, and will not require the insertion of "Cancels."

The Royal 32mo Edition of the "Book of Church Services" will be printed from an entirely New Fount of Type, bold, clear, and elegant.

As the Representatives of the Cambridge Bible Warehouse will not be able to visit all their Customers for some time, Messrs. RIVINGTON respectfully suggest to the Trade the advisability of their ordering at once Selections of Church Services, say of £5 or £10 in amount, and any patterns sent which are not approved of can be exchanged.

All Orders should be addressed-

THE GRAPHOTYPING COMPANY'S NEW AND IMPROVED PROCESS OF

GRAPHOTYPE ENGRAVING

Is a Substitute for WOOD ENGRAVING, and for many things is better adapted, and very much Cheaper. Blocks produced by the Graphotype process are in appearance the same as an ordinary Electrotype from a Woodcut, and are printed in the same way. Landscapes, Architectural Work, Maps, Diagrams, Keys for Colour Work, and Free Hand Drawing generally, are suitable for Graphotype. The Price is less, and the result superior.

For Details and Specimens of the Process, see Handbook of Graphotype, price is. id. per post.

ELECTROTYPING DEPARTMENT

To their Business, and are now prepared to supply Electrotypes to Printers and others, at the usual Trade Prices. Having made several important Improvements in the process, we can execute Orders in a very short time; in fact, almost as soon as by the ordinary Plaster Process of Stereotyping.

Blocks Brought to us in the Morning can be Electrotyped and Delivered the same Evening.

London: THE GRAPHOTYPING CO., Limited, 7, Garrick St., Covent Garden.

YEARLY VOLUMES

Of the following Publications will shortly be ready, and Sample Copies may be had for the Export Market.

THE INFANTS' DELIGHT.

THE CHILDREN'S TREASURE.

In fancy boards, 1s. 6d. Containing 25 Full-page Coloured Pictures, and 36 Engravings.

HOME PICTURES.

DRAWING COPY BOOKS.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of SHAW'S SERIES of 1d. and 2d. DRAWING COPY BOOKS, will be ready early next month. Nos. 4 to 40 are also in preparation. Most of the advanced copies are drawn by some of the best artists of the day, and with the process of Graphotype Engraving a freedom of style can be got by far superior to any other method. Drawing copies printed from wood have a stiffness about them which is anything but desirable, whilst by making use of Graphotype Engravings, we get the Artist's own work, as the lines drawn by him remain to be printed from.

JOHN HEYWOOD'S MANCHESTER READERS.

A New Series of Books of Rudimentary Instruction for Elementary Schools of all grades and classes, specially prepared to suit the requirements of the New Code; will be found to accord the most efficient instruction in Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, for the various Standards of Examination.

The READING AND SPELLING LESSONS are on an entirely New Principle. Primer, or Elementary Reader (for the use of Young Children who require a book of a simpler character than that adapted to Standard I.), simple narrative in monosyllables is the chief feature, the lessons in spelling and reading being graduated, on a system based on the sounds of the vowels, commencing with the short and more simple sounds, and then passing on to the long sounds and complex combinations of dipthongs and consonants. In the First Book, adapted to Standard I., in which the learner is required to read words of two syllables, the same system of gradation will be observed, leading the beginner onwards by degrees to the more difficult monosyllables in the English language, interspersed with dissyllables. In the adoption of this system the MANCHESTER READERS will present an essential difference to books of a similar kind already in use. In the Advanced Books of the Series this system will manifestly be no longer of advantage, but the attention of the learner will then be directed to word-building, or the construction of groups of words from single roots, with the relative meanings of the words thus constructed. The Reading Lessons will be found to be in every way interesting to the pupil, and at the same time calculated to impart to him much useful knowledge and to instil into his mind right WRITING LESSONS are given in the Primer and the First Book. In the former they are designed for practice on the Slate with a slate pencil, which form the only writing implements of every boy and girl who are being educated in the first grades of our Elementary Schools. In every Reader in which writing copies of any utility are given, their use is diminished by showing black letters on a white ground, which the pupil is expected to copy in white letters on a black ground. In our Primer this interchange of contrast between the letter and the ground on which it is written will be obviated, for the pupil will have placed before him letters and figures in white on a black ground, similar to those which be produces on his slate, and which his teacher produces in chalk on the black board. To give the pupil examples which he may copy in exact fac-simile as far as appearance goes, is, although a small matter, perhaps, in itself, nevertheless of more importance to a beginner than it may seem at first sight, as he will thus be enabled to discover his faults, and amend them more easily than when the colours of ground and letters in example and copy are precisely reversed. In the First Book the models are in black letters on white ground, the pupil using this book being considered capable of copying from such.

The LESSONS IN ARITHMETIC in each book will be found specially adapted to the different standards.

An entirely novel feature in the MANCHESTER READERS will be the introduction of DRAWING COPIES for Slate-work in Elementary Schools, instead of the second-hand woodcuts so frequently introduced, without any very good reason or genuine utility, in books of this class. The advantages of this new system of illustration are, that it opens a new field for the exercise of the ingenuity of the pupil as a copyist, and is a most useful auxiliary to the study of writing; that it introduces a pleasing change into the work that is now required, and may be resorted to as the means of arousing anew the attention of a class which begins to flag over other school work; and that it is a step towards the introduction of a knowledge of the First Principles of Art into Elementary Schools.

The MANCHESTER READERS are printed in clear type, on good strong paper, and issued in a stout binding, calculated to resist, as far as possible, the wear and tear of every-day use in Elementary Schools.

Now Ready. Primer or Elementary Reader First Book, adapted to Standard I. 64 pp., Fcap 8vo, price 4d. Second Book, 96 Standard II. . Third Book, 128 84. Standard III. 160 Ready on July 15th. Fourth Book, Standard IV. 192 pp., Fcap 8vo, price 1s.

Preparing. Fifth Book, adapted to Standards V. & VI. 224 pp., Fcap 8vo, price 1s. 2d.

Anno Domini 2071. Translated from the Dutch Original, with Preface, Index, and Explanatory Notes. By Dr. ALEX. V. W. BIKKERS.

"This brockure is an admirable adaptation for the English reader of a work which has attracted great attention in Holland. It gives a humorous, graphic and striking description of what might be expected to be seen in the year 2071. The little book will well repay half an hour's perusal, and is well calculated for a railway companion."—Medical Times and Gasette, June.

Medical Times and Gasetts, June.

"Anno Domini 2071, which is said to have run through three editions in the Netherlands with great rapidity, and to have been translated into German before it was translated into English, consists almost entirely of a fanciful picture of the physical revolution to be worked in the condition of man on the earth within the next two centuries, and is rather hopeless as to any very great moral improvement."—Speciator, June 3rd.

MACKIE'S PATENT STEAM TYPE-COMPOSING MACHINE

Now on View at the West Gallery, No. 5, Moving Machinery, International Exhibition,
UPPER KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON.

PRICE OF THE MACHINES.

One Machine competent to set 12,000 an hour, of any size of type, all the day through, with Two Perforators, will be from £400 to £500, according to the kind of Perforator chosen.

THE SAVING IN PRODUCTION.

The Composing Machine having been tested both mechanically and pecuniarily, Mr. Mackie is prepared to undertake type-setting for 12 months, for any London or other House which purchases a Composer, at Threepence per Thousand, whatever the size of type; set in lines about 18 inches long; read and corrected to copy, and spaced with any one thickness of space required. Any one may estimate the cost of "justifying" by setting a column in long lines with spaces of one size, and then dividing it into proper lines. Each Printer must send his own type, which will be duly accounted for, in pages, not in cases, and pay the carriage, which will be guaranteed not to exceed one half-penny per thousand both ways.

Any speed required will be guaranteed; but MS. copy must be punctuated in the style used at the office sending it.

THE NEW LECTIONARY. -In some parishes the use of the New Lessons will be commenced on the first Sunday in Advent, December 3rd. It will, therefore, be well for booksellers to ascertain from their clergymen when they will be introduced. Having ascertained this, may we be permitted to suggest that they should then print a list of the various Church Services, with specimens of type and descriptions of the bindings, and send them to every family in the parish. Another plan would be to select some good recommendable specimen and send it out on inspection, saying that it will be sent for in a day or two, and if not approved of may then be returned. If the specimen be good, well bound, moderate in price, and well described in the accompanying note, three copies out of four thus judiciously sent out will be kept. It will, however, be unwise to send out copies in this manner till six weeks or so before the new lessons will be adopted.

THE SCOTT CENTENARY. - This National Celebration will take place on the 15th inst. All the Edinburgh shops are to be closed, and the day will be generally observed as a holiday in Scotland. There is every reason why it should be; Scott is the greatest author Scotland has produced, his genius elevated the national character and made the world acquainted with its homely virtues and noble features.

A change has taken place in the firm of Richard Herring and Co., 64, Watling Street; Mr. Compton F. Brown, who has for many years represented the house, having been taken into partnership. The firm will in future be Richard Herring, Brown, and Co.

Mr. Edward Knight, for nearly twenty years in the cataloguing department at Puttick and Simpson's, Auctioneers of Literary property, Leicester Square, has been raised to the rostrum, and took his place for the first time on the 19th of July.

Mr. May has removed from King Street, St. James's, to No. 160, Piccadilly, where, having taken his son into partnership, he will carry on his newspaper and advertising business under the firm of Fred. May and Son.

Mr. Goulden informs us that he has recently sold Mr. D. Mann's printing business, Dover, with the copyright of the Dover News, to Mr. J. B. Jones, late of Reading; Mr. W. R. Holmes' bookselling and stationery business, Morice Town, Devon-port, to Mr. R. W. Comley, late of Exeter; Mr. W. Avery's printing business, with the copyright of the Buckinghamshire Advertiser, to Mr. J. L. Torey, late of Southsea; Mr. E. F. Hill's business, Richmond Road, W., to Mr. W. J. Rands, late of King's Lynn, Norfolk; Mr. West's bookselling and stationery business, Kew Road, Richmond, to Mr. Pearson, late of Westminster; Mr. King's printing and stationery business, Sudbury, to Mr. W. B. Marten, late of Saffron Walden.

Mr. Gray informs us he has recently been engaged in the transfer of the old business of Mr. A. P. Wood, Barnstaple, to Messrs. Marks, Brothers, from Chippenham; and that he has sold the stock and trade of Mr. W. Johnson, Horncastle, to Mr. J. F. Cussons, of the same town, who will continue this business in his own name, while he retains his position in the larger and well-known concern of Cussons and Son.

Mr. J. Froggart Becke, the Manchester swindler, has received a sentence of five years' penal servitude. It is to be regretted that the Manchester receivers of the stolen books were not also included in the prosecution.

SEASONABLE.—A Birmingham bookseller advertises Black's guide to "Watery Places," with POPULAR EDUCATION.—The sum required fo popular education for the current year is one half more than last, and amounts to £1,458,402; it was granted with scarcely any discussion, yet we are old enough to remember the time when the modest sum first asked for, £30,000, almost served to turn a ministry out of power. It is now recognized that it is cheaper and better to educate people than to punish them. Yet, when we see the enormous sums expended in supervision, and in various other ways, we cannot help thinking that the results are scarcely equal to the outlay, and that, as in the army, the rank and file of the teachers are scarcely receiving their full share of the money. Still a very great advance has been made, and we may hope that in a few years' time there will be no such person as an adult who cannot read and write. Booksellers and publishers are doing their best to provide for the popular demand, and are making constant improvements in the schoolmaster's tools. When we look back at the books in use thirty or forty years ago, and contrast them with the present, we cannot help wondering why ignorance does not immediately take to flight. Three or four years' schooling at the present day must be fully equal to six or seven years of the olden time.

Nearly all the educational publishers have issued series of reading and spelling books suited to the requirements of the new code: several new ones or portions are now before us. First we have six books from Messrs. Lockwood and Co. The School Manager's Series, edited by the Rev. A. R. Grant, late one of the Inspectors of Schools, and who therefore should know something of their requirements. He has, therefore, given in these volumes an amount of historical and geographical knowledge seldom found in such books. John Heywood's Manchester Readers, unlike the preceding, go in for a little of all sorts, acting upon the principle that children leave school at an early age. From these books they may not only pick up a complete knowledge of the three R's, but also a little of drawing, with some pieces of poetry, which will be very attractive to children in manufacturing districts. Next we have the series issued by Messrs. Orr, of Glasgow, on behalf of the "Teachers' School-book Association," evidently compiled by practical teachers; a plain, practical, useful, unpretentious series of books. Lastly, we have the sixth volume of the technical series of Mr. J. S. Laurie, who also has been a School Inspector.

All these books are of considerable merit; they are constructed upon the plan which was, we believe, first introduced in the Irish Government series of school-books, and which experience has shown to be good.

We must not omit drawing attention to Mr. Murby's "Geography and Atlas;" an elementary Geography, with sixteen very nice maps; an exceedingly well compiled and very cheap volume.

THE NEW CAMBRIDGE CHURCH SERVICE. Since our last issue we have received a copy of the new nonpareil edition of the Cambridge Church Service. In the Prayer Book portion the only alteration is in the Table of Lessons, but in the arrangement of the Lessons a change for the better has been made. The proper lessons for Christmas and the following holydays precede those for the Sundays after Christmas; the lessons for Holy Week, the Monday and Tuesday after Easter and Whitsuntide, and for Ascension Day, are inserted in their proper places, and where proper psaims are appointed, they are printed in full, preceding the lessons. It is a wellhandsome, compact volume.

SWISS BIBLIOGRAPHY.—We gladly welcome a new aspirant in the field of bibliography, and have much pleasure in announcing the receipt of the seventh monthly number of the Bibliographic de la Suisse, or, as one half the title has it, "der Schweiz," for in that peaceful country the booksellers are all polyglottic, speaking German to one customer and French to another.

Mr. Waller, of Fleet Street, asks us to warn our readers against some unauthorized person pretending to be his collector, who has been endeavouring to obtain books in his name.

Songs of Gladness was mentioned last month as having been received from the Book Society. It was received from the publishers of the Sunday School Union.

FRENCH LITERATURE OF THE PERIOD.—Messrs. Dulau have been improving the occasion by collecting the newspapers, squibs, and caricutures published during the two sieges of Paris. Some of them are very scurrilous and obscene, and are already very rare. The British Museum, and some other large libraries, have secured several of the most complete collections. Those of our readers who wish to see something of the kind of publication in vogue, may do so at a small expense by ordering La Menagerie Imperiale, which consists of portraits of individuals who flourished under the empire, but who are now represented as so many inhabitants of the Zoological Gardens.

THE "ACADEMY."—This is rather an irritating kind of publication, fulfilling no special object. At times it contains nothing which it would pain us to miss, while occasionally there are articles we would not lose upon any account; in the number of August I, there is an article upon Wyclif's writings, by Mr. W. Skeat, the only really good one that we have seen: there is another upon Ossian, by Mr. W. M. Hennesy, well worth reading, and two or three shorter articles of interest; but of the remainder we are benighted enough to call it bosh—padding of the weakest kind. If the editor would condescend to leave his high estate, and consult with mortals of ordinary common sense, he might transform the "Academy" into a journal which ordinary readers would look out for, and which they would make a point of regularly reading or glancing through.

THE LATE MR. JOHN TILLOTSON.—We are requested by Mrs. Tillotson to correct a statement respecting the deceased. She says:—"In THE BOOKSELLER of June there is a mistake regarding the late Mr. Tillotson's education; he was not 'self-taught,' as there stated. On the contrary, he received instruction from first-class teachers at home. Certainly he never entered that world of trial which most youths have to encounter—a public school; but he was, nevertheless, well taught; Greek, the Classics he knew well, and was a good English scholar, with French, &c. I think in justice to the departed, as well as the living, this ought to be corrected."

PERILS OF JOURNALISM.—Our ably conducted contemporary, the Guardian, has had an action brought against it for libel, the charge being that two or three letters from well-known clergymen, electing upon the plaintiff's character, were inted. A verdict for forty shillings was given, is a hard measure for the proprietors, concerning that the plaintiff had had the use of the super for the purpose of replying to his detractors, fand might have brought his action against them, the real offenders, who, however, are in honour aund to reimburse the expenses caused by the correspondence.

PENSIONERS.—The £1200 LIST Civil annually voted by parliament for the relief and reward of distinguished literary and scientific persons, were last year distributed as follows:—Gavin Milroy, Doctor of Medicine, £100, in consideration of his medical services under Government, and especially in the Crimea, and of the injury which he thereby professionally sustained; Mr. Denis Florence McCarthy, barrister at law, £100, in consideration of his literary merit as a poet; Miss Agnes Strickland, £100, in recognition of the merit displayed in her historical works; Mrs. Elizabeth Anster, £50, in consideration of the literary services of her husband, the late John Anster, LL.D.; Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, Doctor of Laws, £100, additional yearly pension to the control of the cont that of £100 granted on the 18th June, 1863, in recognition of his theological labours, and to enable him to complete his ecclesiastical works; Mr. Charles Tilston Beke, £100, in consideration of his geographical researches, and especially of his explorations in Abyssinia; John Stenhouse, Doctor of Laws, £100, in consideration of his scientific attainments, and of the loss of his emoluments as non-resident Assayer of the Mint; Mrs. Emily Coles, widow of Captain Cowper Phipps Coles, £150, in consideration of her husband's services as inventor of the turret-ship system; Mr. Warwick Brookes, £100, in consideration of his talent as an artist; Miss Winifrede Mary Wyse, £100, in consideration of the diplomatic services of her uncle, Sir Thomas Wyse, and of her own limited circumstances; Sir R. Stanford, Knight, £100, in consideration of the losses which he has suffered in consequence of the assistance which he afforded to the Government at the Cape of Good Hope in 1849; Mr. James Robinson Planché, Somerset Herald in the College of Arms, £100, in recognition of his literary services.—From the above list of recipients it will be seen that to be born in that part of Great Britain called England is in itself no recommendation; nor are literature, science, and art the only claims recognized.

STATIONERS' NOVELTIES.—Mr. Leopold R. Mills sends us specimens of some new goods which are deserving of notice. They are all ornamented in imitation of lace or embroider, and so close is the resemblance that we at first thought them real work. The articles are "Washstand Tidys," to protect the wall from splashes; "Lamp Shades," in satin paper and in muslin; and "Table Mats," or "D'Oyleys," at prices varying from sixpence to one shilling.

THREE TEMPERANCE VOLUMES. - Among the works devoted to the temperance movement, the volumes recently issued by Messrs. S. W. Partridge and Co. may be mentioned with commendation. The first is a well-written and powerful tale, by The first is a well-written and powerful tar, by Mrs. S. C. Hall, called "Digging a Grave with a Wine-Glass;" the second, a domestic story of considerable interest, entitled "Nurse Ellerton;" and the third, the "Temperance Manual," by the Rev. Justin Edwards, D.D., reprinted from the control of the contro the edition issued by the American Tract Society; whole of them appropriately illustrated, capitally printed, and neatly bound. In the lastnamed book we find chapters devoted to the origin and cause of intoxication; the changes of opinion with regard to, and the efforts made by, philanthropists and others to eradicate the evils of our drinking customs; the processes by which alcohol deludes mankind, and leads to distress, diserse, and death; and the objections to temperance stated and answered; a manual, says the author, which should be read in every family, and made a text-book for addresses from every pulpit.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Manual of Modern Geography, Mathematical, Physical, and Political, on a New Plan, embracing a Complete Development of the River Systems of the Globe. By the Rev. Alex. Mackay, LL.D. New and Greatly Improved Edition. (Blackwood and Sons.)—Nearly ten years having passed away since the first edition of this book appeared, and many changes having meanwhile taken place in various departments of geography, especially in the political divisions of Europe, a new edition was imperatively demanded by both teachers and was imperatively scholars. In his preface, Dr. Mackay tells us that the "Manual of Geography" was his eldest and first-born literary offspring; that he cheerfully devoted many long years to its production, labouring single-handed in a remote corner of the land, with few books, and fewer friends, to consult. But he had his reward in the emphatic verdict of the press and the unqualified approbation of eminent educationists in all parts of the British empire. Nor is that verdict likely to be reversed; for the new edition contains a digest of all the changes that have recently taken place in the distribution of political power in Europe, the United States, and the British colonies; the discoveries made in far-off seas; the minute, though highly important, principles revealed to astronomers and geologists; and the improvements that have resulted in commerce, manufacture, and inland communication. A concise historical sketch of the political geography of Europe, new diagrams illustrative of the seasons, the tides, and the succession of life in the pre-Adamite ages of the world, have been added; the whole classified under distinct headings, and made easy of reference by an elaborate and admirable index. The work, which forms one of the series known as "Blackwood's Class-books," has been divided, for the convenience of teachers, into two parts; the first devoted to Europe, and the second to the rest of the world, the text being amply supplied with descriptive notes, and, in the mathematical

The Elements of Psychology, on the Principles of Beneke, Stated and Illustrated in a Simple and Popular Manner by Dr. G. Rane, Professor in the Medical College, Philadelphia. Fourth Edition, considerably Altered, Improved, and Enlarged by Johann Gottlieb Dressler, late Director of the Normal School at Bantzen. Translated from the German. (James Parker and Co.)-When a work reaches a fourth edition it is beyond the pale of criticism, and we may fairly assume that it has attained the honour of public acceptance. To many, however, the very term Psychology may be unknown; and for the benefit of that (possibly small) section of our readers, we may explain that the volume deals with the functions of the mind, the metaphysical condition of the soul, and the mental progress of man; and that, too, in a way which does not repel from its technical abstruseness, but invites and attracts from the clearness of its statements, the precision of its details, and the generally understandable nature of its plan,—the "Notions," "Conative (or attemptive) Powers,"
"Feelings," and "Phenomena," and the various sections describing the causes which lead the mind to admire good and repel evil; to estimate the value of truth, consciousness, and moral freedom; to distinguish between impressions, perceptions, and inherent faculties; and to judge for itself as to the harmonious or inconsistent feelings of which it is continually conscious. The work, originally written in German, has been translated into Flemish and other tongues, and in its English dress is popular, in a certain sense, in both England and America.

The Horticulturist; or, The Culture and Management of the Kitchen, Fruit, and Forcing Garden.
By J. C. Loudon, F. L. S. Edited and Revised by William Robinson. (Warne.)—Judiciously curtailing some portions of the original text—as "the analogy between plants and animals," the "classification of plants with a view to horticulture," &c. -re-writing the chapters on the vine and the apple, adding a section on the culture of the pine, and giving throughout such directions as the procress in gardening necessitated, Mr. Robinson has largely increased the value of this standard work. In the process of revision it was found that some of the old engravings were obsolete, and that new ones were requisite. These have been inserted; and the book, originally rich in illustration, is now as nearly complete as could be wished. Each chapter deals with its particular topic in a plain and practical manner; and in those devoted to grafting, budding, training, and transplanting, evident care has been taken to adapt the information to the needs of cottage gardeners and amateurs. It will surprise many to learn that grapes may be cultivated with profit in an English climate; but, if we may believe our author, "every moderate-sized dwelling-house with a little walling attached to it, may with ease be made to produce, yearly, a quarter of a ton of grapes, while leaving a sufficient portion of its surface for the production of other fruits." Lack of knowledge as to the true modes of pruning and training seems alone to account for our neglect of this delicious fruit. In this volume, the secret of success may be discovered by all who take the trouble to read- and to carry theory into practice.

The Summer Tourist. Edited by M. E. The Summer Tourist. Edited by M. E. Braddon (Ward, Lock, and Tyler).—Headed by a tale called "The Zoophyte's Revenge," by the author of "Lady Audley's Secret," we have here eighteen stories, sketches, and poems, collected apparently from magazines, which in their brevity and bright variety seem well adapted for railway and bright variety seem wen adapted for ranway and seaside reading. Especially interesting are the "Shark Story," the "Railway Adventure," "Our Trip to Loch Killroy," the "Tyne Watch," "A Couch of Horrors," and the "Bridge of Straubing,"—the latter a Danubian legend in the story of the contributions by with verse. These several contributions by-with a single exception—anonymous writers, are enclosed in a coloured wrapper, and form a really attractive shilling's-worth.

The Hindu Law: being a treatise on the law administered exclusively to Hindus by the British Courts in India. By Herbert Cowell, Esq., barrister-at-law, and Tagore law professor. (Calcutta, Bombay, and London: Thacker and Co.)

—In the year 1868, the late Baboo Prosonnocoomar Tagore made provision for the appointment of a law professor, to be elected by the Senate of the University of Calcutta, who should "read or deliver yearly at some place within the lectures, without charge to the students and other persons who may attend such lectures." His will further directs that the lectures should be printed, and not fewer than five hundred copies distributed gratuitously; it being evidently the desire of the testator, knowing the lack of law literature in his own country, to provide such a series of textbooks upon Indian law as should be useful to I:: students and practitioners. This volume the substance of the first course of lectures in accordance with the founder's wise and bene-volent intentions. The system of jurisprudence administered in India by the English, says Mr. Cowell, is "of the strangest description, unparalleled in the history of the world. No government was ever called upon to legislate for so heterogeneous a community, or to combine so many conflicting systems of law under one general administration of justice. That community includes Hindus, Mahomedans, Buddhists, Jews, Armenians, Parsees, and Englishmen;" some deriving their law from their religion, others from the places where they were born, or in which they live. Under these circumstances, it became important to review the existing state of the laws in force in the three presidencies, and especially the Hindu family system, to which the founder himself owed allegiance. We find, then, in the fisteen lectures here reprinted, an intelligible account of the position held by the Hindus in the British empire, with details of the systems observed by them with regard to the ownership and transmission of property, the maintenance and guardianship of children, the right of adoption, the contract of marriage, the declining custom of Suttee, and the permission of widows to re-marry; together with what appears to be an unbiassed discussion of the spirit in which Hindu law has been developed and practised in the several Courts of British India; the whole forming a valuable handbook for both students and statesmen.

The Tower of the Hawk. From Passages in the History of the House of Hapsburg. By the Author of "Chillon," &c. (Hatchards.)—Properly to understand this historical romance, the reader should acquaint himself somewhat with the political history of the House of Hapsburg, which, in the female branch, still reigns in the person of the present Emperor of Austria, who is also King After the death of of Hungary and Bohemia. Charlemagne, Austria became a dependency of Bavaria, under the rule of the Counts of Babenberg, in whose family it continued until 1246. On the death of the last of this line a war broke out, and in 1276, Rudolph of Hapsburg, Emperor of Germany, conquered Austria, and made his son Albert its king. In 1437, Albert II. was elected Emperor of Germany; and from that date until 1806, when the then German Empire was dissolved, the Austrian crown remained in the In 1526 Ferdinand I. Hapsburg family. became possessed by marriage of the kingdom of Hungary. The treaty of 1772, by which Poland was dismembered, added Gallicia to the dominions of the Empress Maria Theresa; and, in 1788, the Bukowine, a province of Gallicia, was ceded to the Sultan. This territory, with the Netherlands and Lombardy, which had been annexed by the Treaty of Utrecht, were taken from Austria by Napoleon in 1797. Afterwards Lombardy was restored, and Venice added to the Austrian do-minions; and, by the Treaties of Paris and Vienna in 1814-15, this great Empire, formed of so many antagonistic elements, was consolidated. From this point the history of Austria is well known. In the revolutionary year 1848, the Emperor Ferdinand abdicated in favour of his son Francis Joseph, and by the peace of Villafranca, in 1859, Lombardy was transferred to Sardinia and now forms part of the kingdom of Italy. The plot of the story is laid in that romantic period when Villiam Tell figured as the hero of Altdorff, and Emperor Frederick yielded both his crown d liberty to popular disaffection.

A Catena of Buddhist Scriptures. From the Chiese. By Samuel Beal. (Trübner.)—Beyond the bare facts that the tenets of Confucius are adopted by the court and the upper classes, and that Buddhis ism is the religion of the great mass of the people, little is known in Europe of the religious systems of the Chinese. To be sure, it is a commonly received opinion that the Tae-pings, or revolutionists who have been seeking for the last twenty years to overthrow the present dynasty, profess a kind of debased Christianity; but of the exact nature of their creed, and of the almost universal belief in the agency of the good and bad spirits which influence the seasons and the destinies of the millions, nothing can be certainly stated. An authentic account, therefore, of the Buddhist scriptures and literature, their legends and myths, their development and partial decline, seemed certainly needed. Originally published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, the author's several papers have been revised and extended, and are now published, "as a contribution towards a more general acquaintance with Buddhist literature in China," and a most curious and interesting volume it is; curious, as an illustration of the religious rites and observances of a great Asiatic nation, and deeply interesting, as an elucidationhowever scanty-of the character and influence of Buddhism, which Mr. Beal considers "one of the most wonderful movements of the human mind in the direction of Spiritual Truth." Already favourably known as the translator of two or more volumes of Chinese books, and of an important account of the spread of Buddhism from China to India, Mr. Beal has brought to his work such an amount of patient study and intelligent zeal as cannot but recommend it to the attention of Oriental scholars.

S. Francis de Sales, Bishop and Prince of eneva. By the Author of "A Dominican Geneva. (Rivingtons.)—The "Devout Life" of Artist." S. Francis has been a favourite book of devotion in this country from the time when a copy in a binding enriched with gold and precious stones was presented to James I., down to our own cheap day of sixpenny editions. But of the Author we have never till now had anything beyond a brief memoir. The present elegantly written memoir is evidently the heartfelt tribute of respect to the memory of S. Francis, by one who has studied his works and is imbued with their teach-The object aimed at by the writer "has been less historical or ecclesiastical investigation than a vivid and natural setting forth as far as may be of the holy Bishop's inner mind and life, as it can be traced in his own writings, and in those of his most intimate and loving friends." His conversations, and trifling details of his every-day life, are therefore rather recorded than those greater events on which biographers usually love to dwell. S. Francis was not a great ecclesiastic, he was a man of holy life; in some respects he was not unlike our own saintly bishop, Thomas Wilson; and of both it may be said that their writings "have been the delight of countless pious souls in all parts of the Church." This volume is to be followed by a translation of the "Spiritual Letters," and of Bishop Belley's "Esprit de S. François de Sales," and the "Traité de l'Amour de Dieu"

de l'Amour de Dieu."

The Life and Labours of S. Thomas of Aquin.

By the Very Rev. Roger Bede Vaughan, O.S.B.

In Two Vols. Vol. 1, 8vo. (Hereford: James Hull.)—Thomas Aquinas, one of the great doctors of the Roman Church, was born of noble parents, and, contrary to their desire, embraced the monastic profession. Devoting himself to study, he drew up a system of philosophy, and became one of the most celebrated teachers of his age. He died on the 7th of March, 1274, and was solemnly canonized by Pope John in 1323; his collected works were published at Venice, 1775-88, in twenty-eight volumes; there are also several other editions. The only work which has appeared in an English form, is the Catena Aurea on the four Gospels, and is a collection of comments from the early Fathers expository of the text. Father Vaughan has now, for the first time, in English given us a life of the "Angelic Doctor." Not a mere dry detail of events, but an elaborate comment upon the saint, his writings, his sayings, his acts, and his times; and, incidentally, of his opponents and their teachings. He has done this in a loving spirit, but it must be admitted in an undiscriminating spirit of praise; he can see nothing but good; everything was pure metal; no dross could be found. We do not blame him for this, and read the book with the conviction that the saint is safe in the hands of his friendly biographer; there is no chance of being misled, as we distinctly see the standpoint of the author. The volume see the standpoint of the author. brings the work down to the time when S. Thomas was settled as a teacher at Paris, and ends with a defence of the monastic system. A word should be said for the printing and general "get up" of the volume, which is one of the handsomest and most creditable we have seen

Wedding Bells.—Edited by Edwin J. Brett.

Large 410. (Office.)—We are very much in the habit of running down the cheep. Elegature of the habit of running down the cheap literature of the age; we have fallen into the notion that for a publication to circulate very widely among the working classes it must contain tales of ribaldry, robbery, and wicked adventure. But in so doing we speak either from very imperfect information, or from an examination of some periodicals which are not popular at all. There are some, we regret to say, that are very bad; there is one in particular, which, as a recommendation, is advertised as not sold at the railways. But really bad and immoral publications are the exception, and modern cheap literature, although far from what we could wish it to be, is on the whole as moral and wholesome as that retailed at a higher price. If we inquire respecting the quarters in which it circulates, we find that the penny weeklies are bought by working lads and lasses, by young men and women, who take their journals home, where they are read by fathers and mothers, and by younger brothers and sisters. These are the chief buyers. Servant girls also are good pur-chasers; but the best customers are the young men and women receiving weekly wages-perhaps we should say the more respectable part of them, those who care to read at all. "Wedding Bells," we are informed, has a very large circulation, as many copies being sold in one year as copies of the popular "Christian Year" are sold in ten. The first volume has just reached us. The outside, resplendent in gold and colour, is as handsome and in as good taste as many of the guinea volumes; it is remarkably well printed upon a fairly good but thin paper; more care has been bestowed upon the bringing up of the woodcuts than is usual in cheap books, while the woodcuts themselves are, with scarcely an exception, well drawn and remarkably well engraved, some of them are as good as they can fairly be. The literature we have been deaded carefully into the title of ture we have looked carefully into: the title of one of the tales looked a little fishy and suspicious, but there was nothing objectionable in the tale, nor, in fact, with the exception of a few words, is there anything in the volume. We would hardly recommend it as a class book for the Harley Street Ladies College, but that it supplies good reading for the classes among whom it circulates there can be no question. The chief objection is, that the stories are, as a whole, too exciting; but it may be that this is an element necessary to the success of the periodical. Magazines of this nature, widely circulated as they are, must be performing a great educational work - none the less because its progress is quiet and almost un-

The Life of S. Ignatins of Loyola. By Fathe Genelli, of the Society of Jesus. Translated from the German of Charles Sainte Foi, and rendered from the French by the Rev. Thomas Meyrick, S.J. (Burns and Co.)—With many strict Protestants, the term Jesuit stands for everything that is mean, tricky, and despicable; but perhaps their opponents are not altogether acquainted with the facts concerning Loyola and the Order he founded. Ignatius Loyola, born in 1491 in the Castle Loyola, in the mountains of Biscay, was the son of a nobleman; in his early youth he served as a page in the Court of Spain, and was thence, in the natural order of things, transferred to the army. Being wounded in the foot, he was obliged to relinquish military life. During his illness, he had beguiled the weary hours by reading the Lives of the Saints; and, carried away by enthusiasm, determined to devote himself to the service of the Church. As soon as he recovered, he set out on a pilgrimage to Palestine, with the hope of converting the Mahomedans. After many wanderings, he arrived in 1528 in Paris, where he met some kindred spirits, who joined him in a solemn covenant to establish a new ecclesiastical order. They worked hard and earnestly, took monastic vows, and in the year 1540 obtained from Pope Paul III. the confirmation of their order, under the title of the Society of Jesus. In the following year, Loyola was appointed General of the Order, which post he held till his death in 1556. Considered in the light of reformers and missionaries of truth, the Jesuits were alternately caressed and abused; but in the course of time the principles they advocated came to be so fully accepted, that in 1623 Loyola was canonized by Pope Gregory XV.—In this volume the whole story is fully set forth; and certainly by the light here afforded Loyola and his followers seem to deserve praise rather than reprobation.

Glasgow, Ancient and Modern. Division II., Vol. I. (Glasgow: John Tweed.)—Having already noticed the first division of this volume in the columns of THE BOOKSELLER, it only remains to add that this account of Glasgow-the second commercial city in Great Britain, after Londonis as nearly exhaustive as the nature of such a book will allow. The text is illustrated with a number of woodcuts, and a sketch of Glasgow fair as it existed in 1825, from a drawing in the possession of John Kirsop, Esq., a gentleman well known in the county of Lanarkshire. Two other divisions will complete the work, in the compilation of which, we are informed, every history of Glasgow, from 1244 to the present day, has been diligently consulted.

Her Title of Honour. By Holme Lee. (London: Henry S. King and Co.)-There is little to tell of the plot of this story, for its charm is to be found entirely in the manner of its author; and we all know that the main element of originality is style; but of the latter we may say that it is pleasing without being didactic; while of the story itself we may observe that it is interesting without an attempt at sensation—in the bad sense of that word. It is not too much therefore to conclude that the reader who follows its few incidents will exclaim with Miss Trevelyan, as she concluded the perusal of the dead missionary's journal: "We will not call it the record only of a disappointed life . . . it is a beautiful noble story, look at it as you will."

Fleetwood's Life of Christ. (Virtue.) Foxe's Book of Martyrs. (Virtue.)

Two of the best known works in the book trade, yet now for the first time brought out in small, compact three-and-sixpenny volumes. The firstnamed book has hitherto always been seen in quarto or folio, the second in any and every shape, from three volumes folio to eight volumes octavo, or even compressed into one, but never before with its essence in duodecimo. Fleetwood is apparently given entire. Strange that a book like this should have lived so long; no one knows who the author was, he had no particular merit beyond Protestantism, and a plain style of writing, yet no other work on the same subject has ever superseded this. Both volumes are illustrated with woodcuts.

The Man of His Time. Part I. The Story of the Life of Napoleon III. By James M. Haswell. Part II. The Same Story, as Told by Popular Caricatures of the last Thirty Years. (Hotten.)—Like most of the books published by Mr. John Camden Hotten, this volume is curious and ineresting. Curious, inasmuch as it contains a perfectly grave and well-written life of the exteresting. Emperor of France, interleaved with woodcuts reduced from caricatures from all kinds of sources—which caricatures have more or less reference to the facts related in the memoiroften less than more;—interesting, as showing both the serious and ludicrous aspects of stern historical facts. Thus we have in Mr. Haswell's narrative accounts of Louis Napoleon's expedition to Boulogne and Strasburg, his imprisonment at Ham, his escape thence, and his arrival at Gore House, Kensington; his candidature for the presidency of the Republic, his reign as Emperor, and his final fall from power, and dismissal from the throne of France; while side by side with the descriptive text are pictorial lampoons of the tame eagle, the bricklayer's disguise, the seedy parvenu in London, the Emperor patronizing German princes, Russian autocrats, and English diplomatists; and the fallen monarch returned to England as a powerless exile. Each caricature has its accompanying explanation; and the two accounts, by pen and pencil, of his extraordinary career form together as trenchant a satire upon ambition as Louis Napoleon's worst enemies or best friends—the terms are sometimes interchangeable-could well desire.

THE SCOTT CENTENARY PUBLICATIONS.

Life of Sir Walter Scott. Reprinted, with Corrections and Additions, from the "Quarterly Review." By the Rev. G. R. Gleig, Chaplain-General to the Forces. (Edinburgh: A. and C. Black.)-The Centenary of Sir Walter Scott's birth has naturally given an impetus to the admiration of his countrymen for their one great novelist; and, quite as naturally, that impetus has been stimulated by the production of new editions of his works, biographies, and pièces de circonstance. Of this latter character is Mr. Gleig's memoir, which originally appeared in the "Quarterly Review" for January, 1868, as an article based upon Lockhart's biography of Scott, and is now reprinted, with some few corrections and alterations; and with a Preface, which is neither more nor less than an apology for stating that the great novelist sprang from the middle classes. to be the custom of a well known tavern keeper to stand at his door and invite visitors with the phrase, "Come in, dear boys; the house is full of noblemen;" and when the visitor timidly

asked who was this duke or that earl, or what were the names of such and such lords, he was quietly informed that "in that establishment they only recognized one order of peers-nature's noblemen." So Mr. Gleig thinks it necessary to "remove, if he can, from the minds of some of Sir Walter's relations and connections an erroneous impression which the narrative, as originally detailed in the pages of the 'Quarterly,' seems to have made upon them." And this he does by first re-stating the fact that Scott's grandfather rented a farm under a distant relation, that Sir Walter's father lived and died a writer to the Signet, and that "a hundred or more years ago the cadets of good families not unfrequently became cultivators on the estates of their elder brothers or near connexions, rather than emigrate or seek service under the East India Company. For (he ohserves) even after dreams of the possible restoration of the ancient line had ceased to exercise influence over them, there prevailed in many quarters a settled determination never to send a son out into life in any capacity which should oaths of allegiance and abjuration as they then ran." And then to show the inherited the spirit of manly, true nobility, Mr. Gleig goes on to say, "Such, when stripped of the halo which a fervid imagination cast over it. was the real place among men into which, by the accident of birth, Sir Walter Scott was intro-The stand-point it gave him was neither among the very high nor the very low; but in that middle class which constitutes the backbone of society, both in Scotland and England. Had fancy been with him less exuberant than it was, or the incidents of his early training different, he would probably have accepted it for what it was worth, and made the most of it. As the case stood, the present condition of his family, though in every respect that of gentle-folks, was thrust out of view, in order that he might connect it with times when social precedence was given to those who could ride abroad followed by the largest body of armed retainers, and were most prompt to use them for the good or ill of their neighbours." And the excuse he finds for Sir Walter Scott's weakness in believing himself, or trying to make the world believe, that he had any other title to nobility than that of geniusbest of all claims to distinction—he has recourse to a particularly happy bit of special pleading. "For shrewd and acute," he says, "as in common affairs Scott seemed to be, and innocent of those eccentricities with which genius is often allied, imagination was in him the dominant faculty, to an extent rarely cognisable elsewhere in sane men. From the dawn of his powers to their extinction, it may be predicated of him that he lived two lives-one in the world of living men, another in a world he created for himself; and it is not too much to say that, so far as his own consciousness was concerned, the latter had in it a great deal more of reality than the former. From this extract we may form a pretty correct notion of the character of the memoir, which is admirable in its manner, interesting in its matter, Without and exactly adapted to its purpose. Without adding a single new fact to the biography of Scott, it deals with the incidents related by Lockhart in a way that cannot but be pleasing to English readers, and complimentary to all Scotchmen who have candour enough to hear the truth plainly told about the man, and judgment enough to look elsewhere for an analysis of his genius and an estimate of his literary labours. may be added that the text is adorned with a portrait and occasional illustrations.

Life of Sir Walter Scott. By Robert Chambers, LL.D. With Abbotsford Notanda, by Robert Carruthers, LL.D. Edited by W. Chambers. (W. and R. Chambers.)—A note by the editor fully and satisfactorily explains the history of this memoir, and the reasons for its present issue. It was written by Robert Chambers soon after the death of Scott, and being published at a cheap rate for popular reading, obtained the benefit of an immense circulation—no fewer than 180,000 copies having been sold in a comparatively short space of time. It was subsequently republished with some improvements; and is now reproduced, with certain paragraphs, principally in reference to Scott's acquaintance with the writer, added by William Chambers and distinguished from the original text by being enclosed in brackets. the memoir, which is published as "a small but fitting contribution in homage of the great man, the centenary of whose birth, 15th of August, 1871, is about to be celebrated," are now appropriately appended certain "Abbotsford Notanda," descriptive of the friendly intercourse which long subsisted between Sir Walter and his factor and amanuensis, "William Laidlaw," by Dr. Carruthers, a gentleman well qualified to write on such a topic. The volume, which appears in Roxburghe binding, and is altogether attractive, will be read with interest, both on account of the novelist whose inner life it records, and on that of his fellow-countryman and biographer, who was one

Life of Sir Walter Scott. By the Rev. George Gilfillan. (Edinburgh: Oliphant.) — Lockhart's Life of Scott has long been regarded, and must continue to be regarded, as the standard biography of the great novelist; but it is not every reader who cares for the minute details, the lengthy correspondence, and the personal gossip with which it abounds. On the other hand, there are memoirs attached to the numerous editions of Scott's poetical and prose works, which all err on the side of brevity and conciseness, and present no real pen-portrait of the man. Mr. Gilfillan takes a middle path, and gives a popular and sufficiently complete summary of the leading events in Scott's life, and a genial critical estimate of his works and character.

The Centenary Garland, being Pictorial Illustrations of the Novels of Sir Walter Scott, in their order of publication. By George Cruik-shank and other artists of eminence. With Desimilar and other artists of eminence. With Descriptive Memoir, &c. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—Prefaced by a portrait from the well-known picture by Sir J. W. Gordon, and illustrated by engravings on steel and wood from drawings by Maclise, Turner, Melville, Chisholm, Pichaeles, Tanker, Melville, Chisholm, Richardson, Topham, Hart, and Cruikshank, this volume will be accepted by many as an appropriate contribution to the coming ceremonial in honour of the great Wizard of the North. course George Cruikshank illustrated the ludicrous incidents in the several fictions; and in his best and happiest style, when his pencil was unencumbered by the temperance craze, which hassome say-sobered it down to almost commonplace. Each novel is illustrated by two engravings, a serious and a comic one, and the text itself consists of short descriptions of the engravings and the circumstances under which the novels were produced. Thus "Ivanhoe" is illustrated by a representation of the meeting of Prince John and Rebecca at the passage of arms at Ashby-dela-Zouch, from a painting by S. A. Hart, A. R. A., and the interview of the Black Knight and the Friar of Copmanhurst by the inimitable carica-turist; "Kenilworth," by a picture of the mock battle between the English and the Danes, got up for the entertainment of Elizabeth on her visit to the Earl of Leicester, and Flibbertigibbet taking advantage of Wayland Smith's absence to blow up the forge. And so also with the other novels. A really pretty and unique table-book.

The Popular Edition of the Waverley Novels. Edited by Hately Waddell, LL.D., and published in foolscap volumes by Mr. David Wilson, of Glasgow.—Originally issued in penny numbers, it now appears in shilling volumes in stout paper wrappers. The text is printed in large clear type with notes, and a glossary of Scottish words and phrases, slang terms, and quotations in foreign tongues; with biographical and critical memoranda -as cheap and compact a set of Scott's novels as any working man could wish to possess. The volumes already issued are The Antiquary, Guy Manuring, Rob Roy, and Waverley; each volume being illustrated by a frontispiece and engraved title-page.

The History of the Ballantyne Press in Connection with Sir Walter Scott.—The noblest and yet the saddest episode in Scott's life is that connected with the failure of Constable, his publisher, in the memorable panic year of 1825. The story is well memorable panic year of 1825. known. Sir Walter-who had built his mediæval palace at Abbotsford, where he received all manner of distinguished persons, and extended his princely hospitality to many who were distinguished only by curiosity and a desire to couple their names with that of the great novelist—all at once awoke to the fact that he was a ruined man. Then, with a grand resolve that none of his creditors should suffer loss, he began to work; and actually before his death, in 1832, wrote novels, histories, and biographies which produced no less than £28,000, and reduced the indebtedness of the firm to less than half its original amount. Finally, the sale of his copyrights, and the profits upon his later publications, realized sufficient to pay all the creditors in full; so that no shadow of doubt ever fell upon his honoured name. In this Centenary History of the Ballantyne Press we have a full and interesting the Ballantyne Press we have a full and interesting account of Sir Walter's literary activity at the most brilliant period of Scottish literature—a period which in England was glorified by the genius of Byron, Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey; and in Scotland by the writings of Brougham, Jeffrey, Cockburn, Hogg, Jameson, Lockhart, Christopher North, Dugald Stewart, and Sir Walter Scott himself. In 1783 Scott and Rallantyne were how together at the Grammar. Ballantyne were boys together at the Grammar School at Kelso; when they grew to be men they were intimately associated in business as author and publisher; and now that a hundred years have passed since the novelist was born into the world. the successors of his early friend and schoolfellow in telling the history of their house are justly proud of the fact that it was from that house there issued, in 1802, the first book which brought the young poet into notice, -a collection of ballads and metrical pieces, published under the title of "Border Minstrelsy." In the handsome and appropriate volume before us we have the details of all Scott's commercial transactions with the Ballantynes, and much interesting information concerning the issue of the poems, novels, &c., which made their author famous. The volume is elegantly printed on fine paper, each page enclosed in an illustrated border descriptive of some scene or incident in the several fictions; the whole prefaced with a portrait of Sir Walter in a frame of gold, in which appear miniatures of Ballantyne, Constable, Lockhart, and Jeffrey. The illustration are exquisitely engraved by Messrs. C. a Young, of Edinburgh, from drawings Thomas Sulman; the printing and bindir admirably executed at the Ballantyne Pres

After having circulated in hundreds of thousands in this country and in America; after being translated into most of the languages of Europe, Russian included; and after having attained a popularity almost unprecedented among all classes of readers, the "Dairyman's Daughter" and its kindred stories here appear in a new edition, as a neat pocket volume, preceded by a satisfactory memoir of the author.

From Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, with their "compliments" stamped in two places upon the title page, the first volume of Little Folks, in paper boards.—The Technical History of Commerce; or Skilled Labour Applied to Production. By John Yeats, LL.D., F.G.S., &c., assisted by several scientific gentlemen. Dr. Yeats has produced an instructive work, but a disappointing one. The materials at his disposal have been put together in an interesting manner, but a greater knowledge of details was necessary. Such a work as this should have been written by a number of persons having special knowledge of the different subjects.

THE SCHOOLMASTER'S DRILL ASSISTANT:

A Manual of Drill for Elementary Schools. By aid of which any Master may easily teach his Boys the simplest and most useful parts of Military Drill, and other Useful Exercises. Especially prepared for Schools. By Commander F. M. NORMAN, R.N. With numerous Explanatory Plates.

"This is a book we can thoroughly recommend to all schoolmasters and managers. We rank military drill very high as an educational agent. It is one of the most powerful we know for teaching order, regularity, promptness, and method; and, moreover, if it is properly managed, boys like it. The book before us is a clear and simple manual, abundanly illustrated, and passing easily from step to step; so that by its help alone any schoolmaster may teach himself first, and his pupils afterwards, the needful squad drill. A capital 'marching song' (words and music), is appended. The book is the best and most complete of its kind that we know; and, as we said before, we strongly recommend it."—Literary Churchman.

OF THE THEORY OF MUSIC. MANUAL

By GEORGE SUTHERLAND.

"This is an excellent little work of 24 pages on the elements of music. The author remarks in his preface: 'This book is not intended as a substitute for oral instruction in the art of music, but rather as an auxiliary to it.' Books of this kind will be in great demand now Mr. Forster has adopted Mr. Lowe's device of reducing the grant one shilling perhead in elementary schools, if music is not satisfactorily taught in them."—National Schoolmaster.

HEATH, the Moorland POEMS GEORGE OF

Poet. With Memoir, Portrait, and Illustrations. Edited by Rev. J. BADNALL.

"What struck me first, when I read the little book of remains, was the remarkable fortitude of style, featlessly developed, in treating most unpromising materials, and the occasional intensity of the flash of lyrical emotion. . . . The poem 'Icarus, or the Singer's Tale,' though only a fragment, is more remarkably original than any published poem of Gray's, and in grasp and scope of idea it is worthy of any writer. . . . The readers of George Heath's posthumous book will find many such poems; and every one they read, even when it does not excite their admiration as art, will deepen their respect for the writer's stateliness of character and nobility of mind."—Robert Buchanan in "Good Words."

WILL SHORTLY BE ISSUED.

A NEW SERIES OF

Standard Reading Books for Elementary Schools

EDITED BY A FORMER HER MAJESTY'S INSPECTOR OF SCHOOLS.

THE Editor of these Books being a gentleman of great experience, the Publishers not only await with confidence the judgment of Teachers as to their excellence, but they challenge comparison with any existing Series of Readers, more particularly as they are framed exactly to meet the requirements of the New Code of 1871, having been compiled since its adoption.

The Distinctive Features of this Series are as follows:-

- I. That each book contains within itself all that is necessary to fulfil the requirements of the New Code, 1871; that is to say, a Course of Graduated Reading Lessons, Spelling and Dictation Exercises, and sufficient Examples in Arithmetic for Home Lessons for the whole year.
- 2. That they are designed expressly for Schools under School Boards, as they contain no distinctive denominational teaching.
 - 3. That Illustrations are introduced where they are considered necessary.
- 4 That, in addition to their exactly meeting the requirements of the New Elementary Schools, the lowness of their Price cannot fail to recommend them.
- 5. That the Type, Paper, and Binding will be found all that can be desired.

The Prices will be as follows:

GRAPHOTYPE ENGRAVING

Is a Substitute for WOOD ENGRAVING, and for many things is better adapted, and very much Cheaper. Blocks produced by the Graphotype process are in appearance the same as ordinary Electrotypes from Woodcuts, and are printed in the same way. Landscapes, Architectural Work, Maps, Diagrams, Keys for Colour Work, and Freehand Drawing generally, are suitable for Graphotype. The Price is less, and the result superior.

For Details and Specimens of the Process, see Handbook of Graphotype, price 1s. 1d. per post.

ELECTROTYPING DEPARTMENT

To their Business, and are now prepared to supply Electrotypes to Printers and others at the usual Trade Prices. Having made several important Improvements in the process, they can execute Orders in a very short time; in fact, almost as soon as by the ordinary Plaster Process of Stereotyping.

Blocks brought in the Morning can be Electrotyped and Delivered the same Evening.

London: THE GRAPHOTYPING CO., Limited, 7, Garrick St., Covent Garden.

YEARLY VOLUMES

Of the following Publications will shortly be ready, and Sample Copies may be had for the Export Market.

THE INFANTS' DELIGHT.

In fancy boards, 1s. 6d. Containing 25 Full-page Coloured Pictures, and 84 Engravings.

THE CHILDREN'S TREASURE.

In fancy boards, 1s. 6d. Containing 25 Full-page Coloured Pictures, and 36 Engravings.

HOME PICTURES.

In fancy boards, 1s. 6d. Containing 25 Large Plates Printed in Tints.

DRAWING COPY BOOKS.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of SHAW'S SERIES of 1d. and 2d. DRAWING COPY BOOKS, will be ready carly next month. Nos. 4 to 40 are also in preparation. Most of the advanced copies are drawn by some of the best artists of the day, and with the process of Graphotype Engraving a freedom of style can be got by far superior to any other method. Drawing copies printed from wood have a stiffness about them which is anything but desirable, whilst by making use of Graphotype Engravings we get the Artist's own work, as the lines drawn by him remain to be printed from.

THE PUBLISHERS beg to announce that, in compliance with the desire for a Cheaper Series of Mr. Darnell's well-known and popular COPY BOOKS, so long in extensive use in the Schools of Great Britain and the Colonies, and with a view to meet the increased demand caused by the extension of Education, they have prepared, and will shortly publish, under the above title, a New Series, consisting of Sixteen Numbers, fcap. 4to, each containing twelve leaves.

The first ten numbers have carefully-written copies, printed in pencil-coloured ink, to be first written over and then imitated; the remaining six have two copies on each page, printed in black ink for imitation only—the whole gradually advancing from the simple stroke to a superior small hand.

A LIBERAL ALLOWANCE TO THE TRADE.

DARNELL'S LARGE POST COPY BOOKS. 16 Nos. 6d. each.

" OBLONG FCAP. do. 24 Nos. 3d. "

Do. Cream Wove, Marble Covs. 24 Nos. 4d.

 These Copy Books are the production of an experienced Schoolmaster, and will be found to insure the progress of the pupil, and greatly to lighten the labour of the teacher. The number and variety of the copies secure attention, and prevent the pupil copying his own writing, as in books with single head lines. Gradation is the rule of advance, and success the ultimate end. The assistance given in the primal lessons is reduced as the learner progresses, until all guidance is safely withdrawn.

"For teaching writing I would recommend the use of Darnell's Copy Books. I HAVE NOTICED A MARKED IMPROVEMENT WHEREVER THEY HAVE BEEN USED."—Report of Dr. Maye (N.S. Organiser of Schools) to the Worcester Diocesan Board of Education.

DARNELL'S GRAMMAR made Intelligible to Children. 1s. cloth.

DARNELL'S ARITHMETIC made Intelligible to Children. 1s. 6d. cloth.

DARNELL'S SHORT and CERTAIN ROAD to READING. 6d. cloth.

"Mr. Darnell has conferred a great benefit on the rising generation. He has composed a series of elementary treatises in which the comprehension of the science or art taught is so much facilitated that children of the dullest capacities are made capable of comprehending what is required of them; whilst teachers are relieved from the difficulties of imparting knowledge in the desultory and incomprehensible manner often practised."—The Tintes.

BY THOMAS DARNELL.

PARSING SIMPLIFIED: An Introduction and Companion to all Grammars; consisting of Short and Easy Rules, with Parsing Lessons to each. By THOMAS DARNELL. Third Edition. Price 1s. cloth.

"The rules are intelligible at a glance, and so short and simple that they may be easily committed to memory. Sound in principle, singularly felicitous in example and illustration; and the boy that will not learn to parse on Mr. Darnell's plan is not likely to do so on any other."—Morning Post.

The Reading and Spelling Lessons will be found of in-estimable value, being based upon a perfect system of Gradation, and differing in style from any others published. Writing Lessons are introduced in the Primer and the First Writing Lessons are introduced in the Primer and the First Book; those in the former being expressly designed for practice on the Slate, the letters in the copies being white on black ground. The Lessons in Arithmetic will be found adapted to the different standards, and an entirely novel feature in the introduction of a Series of Drawing Copies for Slate practice, instead of the inferior woodcuts which are generally found in Reading Books.

"Messrs. Hurst and Blackett's 'Standard Library of Cheap Editions' will doubtless be a very successful undertaking. The volumes cannot fail to obtain a large circulation in their present convenient and cheap shape. They combine with the great recommendations of a clear, bold type, and good paper, the lesser, but attractive merits, of being well illustrated and elegantly bound."—Past.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF WILLIAM BEWICK, THE ARTIST. Edited by THOMAS LANDSEER, A.R.A. 2 vols. large post, with Portrait. 24s.

"Mr. Landseer's account of Bewick's life is altogether interesting. The whole work gives a lively and most welcome view of the character and career of a man who is worth remembering on his own account, and yet more on account of the friends and great men with whom he associated. There are very welcome references to Haydon, Wilkie, Wordsworth, Ugo Foscolo, Hazlitt, Sir Walter Scott, Shelley, Keats, Leigh Hunt, and a score or more of other men of whom the world can hardly hear too much."—Examiner.

NEW ILLUSTRATED PRIMER.

By OLD HUMPHREY. Revised by T. B. S.

"To young mothers especially, this beautifully illustrated little work cannot fail to prove very acceptable. It is in every way worthy of its gifted author."—Mothers' Treasury.

"We recommend this beautifully illustrated book. Both the pictures and rhymes will charm and teach young children, and beguile them to learn."—Wandsworth Advocate. "An attractive book for children."-Rock, Feb. 17, 1871.

"One of the best of spelling books. Here and there we see a touch of fun, very hard to introduce into a spelling book."—Sword and Trowel.

"In this primer each letter of the alphabet is illustrated Besides this, by two woodcuts, and an appropriate verse. Besides this, there is a variety of pieces dear to the juvenile mind, accompanied by excellent pictures. Old bachelors will find this a capital book for their baby friends."—Literary World.

"We think the youngsters in the nursery would enjoy learning the letters and seeing the pictures... It is prettily got up, and all the great A's and bouncing B's are nicely illustrated."—Merry and Wise, March, 1871.
"Surely a royal road to learning has been found at last-for little folk, at least. What a treasure will not this handsome 'Primer' be to many a young beginner? It is neally got up, on good toned paper, full of illustrations, and with a lot of just such anecdotes as will attract the children. All who have to do with teaching the little ones should get this book: it is one of the best of its kind we have ever seen."—Irish Presbyterian Sabbath School Teacher, March, 1871.

NELSON'S SCHOOL SERIES.

ENGLISH READING BOOKS, adapted to the Standards of the Revised Code.

The READING SERIES, now completed, is adapted to all classes of schools, and is fitted not only to teach the art, but also to train pupils to the love of Reading. It is admirably suited to the REVISED CODE "STANDARDS.

The earlier books of the Series are chiefly composed of narratives and short descriptions, in easy language, of scenes and circumstances interesting to children. As the Series advances, Sketches in Natural History, Physical Geography, History, and Biography, call forth the observing powers, engage reflection, and thus prepare for the business of life. Each Reading Book is interspersed with choice poetic extracts, specially calcu-pare for the business of life. Each Reading Book is interspersed with choice poetic extracts, specially calculated to produce fluency in reading.

Their extensive use throughout Great Britain and the Colonies is the best proof of the adaptation of the Books to School purposes; and that, for the higher aim of School instruction, as well as for the formal requirements of the Revised Code, they have the approbation of School Managers and Teachers.

CHRONOMETRICAL CHART

HISTORY ENGLAND.

In royal folio, bound in cloth as an Atlas, price £2 2s.; or Mounted on Roller, forming a Map five feet square.

"This Chart is as essential to the Study of History as is a Map to the study of Geography. By localizing each event, it entirely removes the difficulty of Chronology."

The opinions of Lords Cairns, Brougham, Palmerston, Shaftesbury, Prince Louis Buonaparte, Thiers, Guizot, Mignet, Carlyle, Hook, Froude, Laurie, &c., will be forwarded on application to GEORGE PHILIP, 32, Fleet Street.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq. (Rector of the University of Edinburgh.)

5, Great Cheyne Road, Chelsea, Oct. 22, 1867.

DEAR SIR,—I have more than once looked into your Map of the History of England, and can DEAR STR,—I have more than once looked into your map of the falsory of England, and an now, since you request it, have no hesitation in saying, what is strictly the truth, that, were I a school-master, teaching young people English History, I would decidedly procure myself a copy of that map, and hang it up, where it should be continually conspicuous and legible to all my pupils.

Yours sincerely,

T. CARLYLE.

PRACTICAL LINGUIST

Being a System, based entirely upon Natural Principles, of Learning to Speak, Read, and Write.

GERMAN.—Containing Exercises, Anecdotes, Accidence, Grammatical Commentaries, Permanent and Auxiliary Vocabularies. 2 Parts. Royal 8vo, limp cloth, 5s. 6d.

"We have no hesitation in characterizing this as, in many respects, a remarkable work. Mr. Nasmith has not only brought out a work superior, as far as we know, to any similar one which has preceded it, but he has hit upon an entirely new system, and, if he has not discovered a royal road to learning, he has at least found out a path much shorter, simpler, and more natural than any we have hitherto seen."—Educational Times, October, 1870.

"It is a scientific reduction of the practice by which the child acquires his native tongue, and by which the foreigner learns the language of the people among whom he may happen to be cast, when unable to attain his end by means of books."—The Educational Review, January, 1871.

"It must suffice to say that the soundest principles are evinced through the two attractive volumes under notice, and that no more agreeable tutor, in one of the most desirable of living languages, can be consulted than our author, Mr. D. Nasmith."—The Morning Advertiser, Sept. 9th.

"Mr. Nasmith has spared no labour in the development of the 'practical' system, which is exceedingly interesting, and will, we are convinced, be highly appreciated by any who may attempt to acquire German by its aid."—Public Opinion, Sept. 10th.

"This is really an original introduction to a language, working out in a systematic and thorough manner a good many principles which are now generally accepted as the right method of learning a language, but are not consistently acted upon greatly for want of a proper system. . . The work is conscientiously executed and will be easily used."—Economist, Dec. 10th, 1870.

"We can unhesitatingly say this much,—we have seen no better plan for teaching one of the most difficult of modern languages."—Sunday Times, Oct. 16th, 1870.

"Mr. Nasmith's two volumes contain the essentials of the grammar clearly and fully stated, exercises, vocabularies, reading lessons and grammatical commentaries."—Athenæum, Nov. 5th, 1870.

"Clear, comprehensive, facile and correct, this work is decidedly the best of its kind that has yet been published for the use of English scholars."—European Mail, Oct. 7th, 1870.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.; or limp cloth, 2s.

"The idea is so simple, so good, and so well worked out, that we cannot do better than let Mr. Nasmith explain it in his own words."—Examiner, June 17th, 1871.

"The system, to say the least, has a philosophical basis, and we should much like to see it fairly tested in actual teaching."—Educational Times, July 1st.

"We cordially recommend this book to the notice of acting teachers in elementary as well as middle class schools; and, indeed, to all who take a practical interest in the instruction of the young. Public Opinion, July 15th.

Records. By the Author of "The Annals of England." Crown 8vo, 500 pp. With Maps, 55 cloth, "School histories are generally mere abridgments of some larger work, or at best compilations from several, rather than the result of original investigation. This may fairly be styled a new one, from its being constructed on the new plan of consulting original authorities, and thus throwing new light on events and persons hitherto misrepresented and misunderstood. Not satisfied with traditional views, the writer has examined the earliest writers, the statute-book, the public records, and the various works lately issued by authority, and carefully weighed all the evidence within reach. The result is a far more accurate account of our history than can be found in ordinary text-books. It has also more pretension to completeness, since it treats the period before the Conquest at greater length. Though of necessity condensed, it is not obscure. There is a brief geographical introduction, with four maps of Britain at various periods, containing all places of historical note. This we consider a great advantage. Generally speaking, the author is moderate in the expression of his opinions, but he takes no pains to conceal his decided bias in favour of authority both in Church and State."—ATHENEUM.

FORTY THOUSAND SOLD IN A FORTNIGHT.—THE BEST PENNY COOKERY BOOK.

Specimen Copy, Post Free, for Three-halfpence; or Twelve Copies, Post Free, for One Shilling.

BEETON'S PENNY COOKERY BOOK

Contains Two Hundred Recipes for Good Breakfasts, Dinners, and Suppers, with full Instructions, and Weekly Bills of Fare, for persons earning from 10s. to £2 per week.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

"To make a little go a great way is the want, the necessity of toiling millions. He has been proclaimed a benefactor of his species who causes two blades of grass to grow where only one blade grew before. To make a meal for two out of materials which have only formerly provided a meal for one, is also serviceable to the State, and enriches the commonwealth. That this problem is generally practicable throughout these islands, I have no manner of doubt. The ways and means, to a not inconsiderable degree, are, in this little book, I heartily believe, set forth. Much has been done during the last ten years or so to rescue us from the reproach of being the worst-fed people in the world. Much more remains to do. The best plan of doing what is needed is that those persons who are able, from their knowledge or position, to instruct and put the poor in the way of making better use of their materials, should begin and continue to help them to a sensible knowledge of cookery. The instructions here given in the Recipes are minute and clear; but a little verbal personal assistance will be of great value. Give this assistance, is my suggestion. As for this book, I look for no profit from its sale; so I can fairly ask others to do what I have done. Spend a little time and trouble to effect a reformation, as much required by, and of equal utility to, the nation as many a change in Church and State, brilliantly debated and historically recorded."

NEW EDITION OF BUTLER'S GEOGRAPHY.

A NEW INTRODUCTION TO GEOGRAPHY:

In a Series of Lessons for Youth.

With an Appendix, containing Problems on the Globes, & Questions as Exercises for each Lesson.

BY JOHN OLDING BUTLER.

NINETEENTH EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED, PRICE 2s. 6d. Cloth.

HE present Edition of "Butler's Introduction to Geography" has undergone thorough revision at the hands of an eminent Geographer. Without in any way altering its treatment of the subject-attested as the value of that treatment is by a lengthened course of usage in schools, and by the approval of experienced teachers—the Editor has sought not merely to correct inaccoracies, which, from various causes, had crept into the text, but to engraft on it such additional information as lapse of time and altered political circumstances, as well as the continuous extension of geographical research, have rendered necessary. In the case of a subject so eminently progressive as GEOGRAPHY, such revision, at frequent intervals, is especially demanded. The altered political relations of Italy, Austria, Denmark, Germany, and other States of Europe, not less than the information which recent explorations have furnished respective the Nile and other problems of Africa Company, with the respective limits of the furnished respecting the Nile and other problems of African Geography, with the respective limits of the British Colonies in Australia and elsewhere, may be referred to as illustrations of this truth.

Considerations such as the above have guided the present Editor in the performance of his task; and, in the assurance that no effort has been spared to render this Edition of "Butler's Introduction to Geography" as complete as possible, the Publishers hope for a continuance in its behalf of the favour which it has higher animum of an area premium of the second publishers.

London: W. WALKER & CO., and C. W. STEVENS, 5, Great Queen Street, W.C., and may be had of all Booksellers.

The securing of subsequent editions, and from various sizes of type, as the paper may be perforated in duplicate, lent, sold, or used again and again, and in future years.

The machines will set any sizes of type, and the same perforations will set as many sizes as may be desired—a Shilling Bible and a Family Bible, for instance. [This may be done simultaneously by the machine named below, each size coming out at the rate of 40,000 an hour.]

The brainwork of the machine is thus made permanent.

Small type is set with the same rapidity of the size in the same rapidity of the same the increased Small type is set with the same rapidity as large—viz., 12,000 an hour. [This may be increased to 40,000.]

Ogics may perforate at home for offices any distance away.

Authors may send perforated slips, instead of "early sheets" abroad.

Justification is very easy, as proofs are pulled from the long lines, and corrections then made, the workman always seeing his matter many lines in advance.

AN ENLARGED MACHINE, now in course of making, will set alternately or simultaneously five kinds of Type, including Two-line letters. Thus, Advertisement First-lines, Footnotes, and Quotations may be set without a moment's delay.

Speed Guaranteed at 40,000 an hour for Each size of Type, or 200,000 an hour if all five are being set at once. Columns of News, or Books, may be thus set simultaneously in five sizes, no extra mechanism required, no extra travel of the Perforated Paper, more than in the Exhibition machine.

TRADE AND LITERARY GOSSIP.

Messrs. Grant and Co., of 102, Fleet Street, proprietors of the School Board Chronicle, and the Gentleman's Magazine, are about to enlarge their publishing business, and have appointed Mr. II. Wooldridge (who was for many years at the head of the publishing department of Smith, Elder, and Co., Cornhill) as their manager. Several important works are on their list, one of which will be an illustrated topographical serial.

A change has taken place in Messrs. Low's firm; it is now Sampson Low, Marston, Low, and Messrs. Gall and Inglis, of Edinburgh, like other Scottish publishers, finding that their principal trade was with England, have opened a branch establishment in London, and have taken the premises in Paternoster Row recently vacated by Messrs. Nelson and Sons.

Mr. Goulden informs us that he has recently sold Mr. Prince's stationery business, Holloway Road, to Mr. Stacy.

OXFORD.—The partnership between Messrs. Wheeler and Day having been dissolved, Mr. Geo. P. Day has commenced business on his own account at 109, High Street.

IRELAND, —The Irish Builder has an excellent article upon the decay of the book trade in Ireland; a lament for the past. It should awaken the attention of the rising James Duffys—and there must be many of them in the country—and induce them to cultivate a branch of native industry that cannot fail to pay those who embark in it. For instance, why do the booksellers of Ireland import foreign missals and breviaries, instead of printing for themselves? And are there no native artists who can supply their countrymen with good and cheap wall-pictures in place of the wretched German daubs now found there? The article in the Builder should be read with attention by all good Irishmen, Protestant or Catholic, Repealer or Loyalist, Fenian or its opposite, whatever that may be.

Mr. Holmes informs that he has recently sold the old-established business belonging to Messrs. White and Sons, Merthyr Tydvil (in the same hands thirty-seven years), to Mr. Farrant, of Wellington, and Mr. Frost, late of Liverpool. The new firm will trade under the style of Messrs. Farrant and Frost. Also Miss Carpenter's business at Forest Hill, to Mr. Battye, late of Croydon. Also Mr. Griffin's business at Fore Street, Edmonton, to Mr. Alfred Freeman Tilley; and Mr. John William Tebbutt's business at Biggleswade

NEW YORK.—The extensive and curious stock of the late Mr. William Gowans, which contains hundreds of articles attractive to book-buyers, will be sold by public auction in the course of the next few months.

THE NEW LECTIONARY.—Although the use of the new Church Service is not legal till January next, some of our spiritual pastors and masters, notably the Dean of Westminster, are breaking the law by using it already; and doubtless a large number of others will commence the use of it on Advent Sunday. Booksellers should be on the look out.

NEW RATES OF POSTAGE.—On the 5th of October next the following reduced rates of postage for inland letters, and sample packets, will come into operation:-For a letter or packet not come into operation:—For a letter or packet not exceeding 1 oz., 1d.; exceeding 1 oz. but not exceeding 2 oz., 1/2d.; exceeding 2 oz. but not exceeding 4 oz., 2/2d.; exceeding 4 oz. but not exceeding 6 oz., 2/2d.; exceeding 6 oz. but not exceeding 8 oz., 3d.; exceeding 8 oz. but not exceeding 10 oz., 3/2d.; exceeding 10 oz. but not exceeding 10 oz., 4d. Any packet exceeding the weight of 12 oz. will be liable to a postage of 1d. for every ounce, beginning with the first ounce. It must be distinctly understood that these rates will not begin to take effect before the 5th of October. The rates of postage for books, papers, and printed matter of all kinds will remain the same as at present.

THE PRAYER BOOK.—The "Table Talker" in the Guardian says: "Is there any law-note binding clergymen and churchwardens in the selection of the editions of the Bible and the Book of Common Prayer to be placed in a church for official use? Scarcely two modern editions of the Liturgy will be found to coincide exactly; and something similar may be said of the Bible as well." Is the Table Talker quite correct in his statement of fact? We are disposed to think that it is merely a bit of loose talk about a matter on which the "Talker" has very little information. If he will take three quarto prayer-books, published this year by the three authorised presses, he will find them all alike, except, perhaps, that one still retains the old spelling of Peny and that the others have modernized the orthography. In the Bible we believe that there is now no variation, one standard being followed. Is not the "Talker," too, a little loose in his use of the word "Liturgy"?

A CORRECTION. - In the account given of Mackie's Type-Composing Machine, in THE BOOKSELLER for July, it was stated that the Graphic was composed by the machine. Messrs. Clay, the printers, write to us to say that this is an error, as the machine has never been employed upon that paper.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE.—The price of this popular serial will be reduced to sixpence in October, when a new series will be commenced.

THACKERAY'S WORKS .- From an advertisement in our pages it will be seen that a cheap re-issue of all Thackeray's works in monthly volumes is contemplated.

REMARKABLE LIBEL CASE.—A trial which took place on the 16th ult., at Bristol, will go far to alter the tone in which newspapers have been in the habit of speaking of each other. Hitherto it has been considered quite safe to speak of a paper as though it had neither head, soul, nor body; of the writers, that they wrote according to their interests, not according to their convictions; of the management, that it was dishonest; that it stated a fictitious circulation for the mere purpose of decoying advertisers; and that its subscribers were liable to be fleeced. The Western Morning News, a paper published at Plymouth, was annoyed at finding a comparison made by an opposition paper, the Daily Mercury, showing that the circulation of the Mercury was larger than that of the Morning News, while the advertisements of the former numbered 10,378 more than those in the latter paper. The News thereupon charged in the latter paper. The News thereupon charged the Mercury with inserting advertisements with out orders, and then endeavouring dishonestly to obtain payment. The trial, which lasted two obtain payment. The trial, which lasted two days, ended by the jury awarding £400 damages to Mr. Latimer, the proprietor of the Mercury, the judge very properly saying that the libel on the paper must be a libel upon somebody, and that that "somebody" was very naturally the proprietor. A COPYRIGHT CASE.—Mr. Lister, of Glossop, proprietor of the Conservative Standard, having reprinted some chapters of a tale called "Dick Tarleton," from the London Journal, without permission, the proprietor of that work, Mr. W. S. Johnson, sued him for damages. The defendant suffered judgment to go by default, and the jury assessed Mr. Johnson's damages at £125. An Advertising Swindler.—In the Stock-port Police Court, a Scotchman of respectable appearance, who gave the name of James Gibb, but whose real name is believed to be Stewart, was committed for trial at the Knutsford Sessions on a charge of obtaining 27s. from two men, under the pretence that he was collecting advertisements for a Guide to Stockport. Such a publication had never been contemplated. He has since been sentenced to six months' hard labour.

LITERARY LARCENY.—A very interesting work might be written upon the ethics of literature. The code has never been properly drawn up, and, consequently, every one does that which is right in his own eyes. Apparently, too, one thing is perfectly fair and proper, while another, running on all fours with it, is as flat burglary as was ever committed. Thus "Dame Europa's School" is followed by a hundred other similar publications, and the author feels himself honoured. Mrs. John Jerningham writes a journal, and her husband responds; thereupon the lady swears they were never married at all, and that the gentleman has no right whatever to her name; he is not John Jerningham, and has no right what-ever to pin himself to her petticoats—petticoats indeed, she means to wear the inexpressibles! Ecce Homo says that Ecce Deus is squatting upon territory to which he has no right, and although the space was unoccupied temporarily, yet it was not to let. Mr. Charles Reade is very eloquent in defence of the Eighth Commandment, but does not hesitate to borrow a female preacher from Adam Bede. True, it was a terrible temptation, and the Eighth Commandment is not far removed from the Seventh-and his story reveals some terrible rents in that. Even Macaulay borrowed a New Zealander from Kirke White; and our ethical Justinian lay under an unacknowle obligation to the obscure philosopher Niew The truth appears to be that authors an lishers don't inquire whether the aut they presume that he has no further occasion for it; and, acting on the belief that

He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen, he's not robb'd at all, appropriate all that is of use to themselves. If Mr. Tennyson, or any other eminent poetical anthropologist, gave us a poem on Green Men, a host of imitators would spring up with verses on blue, yellow, orange, and all other coloured men to be found on signboards or elsewhere. America the epidermis must be thinner than here, America the epiderinis must be tilinuer man nero, for in Philadelphia a publisher has been found so "jolly green" as to defend himself when the charge of appropriating an idea was brought against him! We give prominence to the case lest it should be infectious, and any one here should be guilty of any similar act of weakness, Miss Alcott wrote a book called "An Old Fashioned Girl;" it is a charming book, and very deservedly had a large sale. Apparently the Apparently the lady and her publisher fancied that, having gone into the Far West and cleared a settlement, they had a right to the "Old Fashioned" territory; but they laboured under a delusion. Messrs. William "An Old-Fashioned Boy." They "naturally supposed that purchasers of 'An Old-Fashioned Girl' would like the books uniform, and as the (girl's) style was neat, they adopted it "-i.e. they not only adopted the title, but they copied the style and binding. Miss Alcott and her publisher have protested against this plagiarism, and Messrs. W. B. Evans and Co. have had the weakness to defend their conduct. We must protest against this act of theirs as unbecoming and undignified. Take all you can, hold it fast, and give no reason for taking it, should be the motto of all authors, publishers, and playwrights hard up for ideas of FOREIGN DEGREES.—Two papers are preeminent in their denouncement of shams-Church Times, which exposes everything like absurdity or impropriety on the part of the Evangelical party; and that refuge for all authors who have grievances against the wicked, extortionate, ignorant, booksellers or publishers; yet both, in their advertising pages, admit advertisements which, perhaps, it would be libellous to speak of in proper terms, but which if the papers in question were not paid to insert they would be the first to denounce. We presume that the advertisements in question have only been seen by the business part of the establishments, and have escaped eyes editorial. Still, if we are correct in our estimate of the value of the 'Degrees in Absentia," we think there is some culpability in helping people to obtain them :-

-To this popular edition of the Nimmo's Poets .-Works of the British Poets, the publisher has now added the fresh attraction of well executed alluminated title-pages.

The Olio is the title of a new penny weekly de-I to literature, music, and the drama. Like periodical of the same name published a urter of a century ago, its aim is high; and if e four numbers already published be any critefon, The Olio stands a considerable chance of success.

Advertising as a Fine Art is the title of an article in the Riverside Bulletin. The writer urges that the publisher of a book can describe it more fully, and praise it quite as powerfully and as disinterestedly as the magazines and newspapers, which are all more or less paid for doing the work; and that the public will just as readily believe a respectable publisher as a paid newspaper critic !

THE DEVIL IT IS!-An American lawyer, having investigated the matter, has discovered that the souls of men are in reality the spiritual essences, or angels, who, having been cast out of heaven along with Satan, are now upon their trial here; those of us who behave ourselves properly will be reinstated, but those who do not will be for ever cast out. If this view be correct it will account for that consciousness of preexistence which at times steals over us, and will also account for the tendency of many not to throw off their allegiance to their fallen leader. It also settles the vexed questions of our natural depravity, of the origin of evil, and some other points which the Assembly's Shorter Catechism leaves doubtful. The title of the book, which is published in Philadelphia, is War in Heaven.

PRINTERS' ALMSHOUSES. - The two new wings in connection with these almshouses were opened on Saturday, August 5th, under the Presidency of the Right Hon. Earl Stanhope. A large number of friends of the Printers' Corporation attended, and partook of breakfast under a marquee on the grounds at Wood Green, and a subscription list was opened for the endowment, &c., of the new buildings, amounting to above £600.

THE SCOTT CENTENARY.—This was kept in Edinburgh, more Hibernico, on the 9th ult., 2 day which represents nothing. In London, on the true anniversary of Scott's birth, Mr. Hep-In London, on worth Dixon honoured some Scotchmen by presiding over them at dinner. Fortunately for his fame, Sir Walter Scott's genius is such that his fame will survive notwithstanding all parasitical attempts to obtain notoriety by trying to fix upon his skin. Scott, like Milton, Burns, and Shakspeare, requires no monument; his works will immortalise his memory.

REWARDS.—The composer of the celebrated "Watch by the Rhine," Karl Wilhelm, has received £150 from Prince Bismarck, with the promise that it shall be annual. Dr. Russell of the Times, in consideration of his German proclivities in reporting the war, has received the "Iron Cross of the Second Class;" a decoration which he is not allowed to wear in England without special permission! BOSTON, U.S.-Messrs. Osgood and Co. have lost no time in providing a goodly list of books for their second year's business. It contains:

A Dictionary of American Biography, by Francis

S. Drake.—A Poetical Handbook for Students and Scholars, with introductory essay and notes by Emerson. — The Dickens' Dictionary; a key to the characters and principal incidents in Dickens's writings. - Yesterdays with Authors, comprising reminiscences of Thackeray, Dickens, Hawthome, Miss Mitford, and others; by James T. Field.

CUT OR UNCUT .- The English press has recently enlivened itself over the important question whether books should be issued cut or uncut, and the arguments, pro and con., have been earnest if not entertaining. John Bull has plenty of time to cut his books and considers himself somehow distinguished by doing it, but Young America is impatient of all such needless hindrances. too many thousand miles of railroad to build, too many stocks to bull or bear, too many asylums to organize and equip, too many fast horses to train and bet on, to waste time in cutting the leaves of his books. Thinking that many readers of Every Saturday may share the gratification of Young America in the great convenience of having their papers pasted and trimmed, and that they may be interested to know how this result is effected, we give an outline of the operation. The machine that performs the entire process of folding, pasting, and trimming, is properly two machines: -a large one to fold the whole sheet, and a small one to fold the half-sheet. These machines (or parts of the compound machine) are placed together at right angles somewhat like a letter L. One operator feeds the large sheets, another the halves, and each can stop the machine at any moment, and thus prevent the spoiling of sheets. The operator at the large machine places a sheet on the table, securing it in the exactly proper position by putting it so that two pins in the machine shall go through holes made when the sheet was printed. Immediately after the sheet is on its pins, a paste ruler descends and leaves a line of paste in the centre of the margin between pages 3 and 6, 11 and 14. Instantly the ruler rises and a serrated blade falls lightly on the middle of the sheet, forcing it downward between two rollers, which makes the first fold and press the paste-line spoken of above against the middle of the margin between pages 2 and 6, 10 and 15. Then the sheet is folded again by passing between rollers, and as it moves along, a little wheel about the size of an old-fashioned penny, made when copper was very abundant, leaves a line of paste between pages 4 and 13, 5 and 12. The large sheet is now pasted and folded twice; one more folding completes it. Meanwhile the half-sheet, which started at the precise moment with the whole sheet, has gone through a process similar to the second pasting and folding of the whole sheet, and now the two are nearly as far apart as they can be on the limbs of their L. During the movement of the sheets through the machine they have been duly trimmed. They now move simultaneously toward the point of junction, the whole sheet reaching it a moment after the half, and lying immediately above it. Instantly a serrated blade strikes the half upward against the whole, and both between rollers which fold the two parts together, the half inside the whole; and thus deftly and happily wedded, the twain comes forth one paper—a perfectly pasted, folded, and trimmed Every Saturday. The machine, when managed by experienced operators, will fold thirty copies a minute or 1,800 an hour. This is the only machine of the kind in the world, and was made expressly for Every Saturday by Messrs. Chambers Brothers and Co., of Philadelphia. Other machines previously constructed by the same ingenious hands had folded the sheets of books, but no other machine has ever been made to fold, paste, and trim two separate sheets and put one inside the other. The original conception of the machine, so far as the pasting is concerned, is due to Mr. G. K. Snow, of Boston, under whose patent and exclusive license it was constructed, but the development and perfecting of a complete folding, pasting, and trimming machine we owe to Mr. Cyrus Chambers, Jun.—Every Saturday.

POOR MISS FINCH is the title of Mr. Wilkie Collins' new tale in Cassell's Magazine. Those who have read the "Woman in White" will remember the wonderfully realistic style in which the story was told—sometimes by the author in the orthodox style, at others by transcripts from diaries, and occasionally in letters to and from the principal actors. A similar plan seems to be adopted in Poor Miss Finch. "The persons principally concerned in the story are, a blind girl, two (twin) brothers, and a curious foreign woman. I am the curious foreign woman, and I take it upon myself—for reasons which will pre-sently appear—to tell the story." There is a charm about this manner of beginning a novel which is akin to the ever-welcome "once upon a time" of the old fairy tales, and the homely yet attractive method of De Foe. The story opens well, for already we are on the threshold of a mystery, which concerns Poor Miss Finch, the beautiful blind girl; Madame Pratolungo, the "curious foreign woman," who, being French by birth, and the widow of a "celebrated South American patriot" by fate, is equally full of chatter, vanity, and false sentiment; the stepmether of the blind girls entiment; the stepmether of the blind girls entiment; mother of the blind girl, a weak, good-natured woman, who, with fourteen children of her own, passes her life in reading novels, nursing a noisy baby, and going about the house in a state of semi-deshabille, endeavouring all day long to pick up the half-hour she lost in the morning; a model waiting-woman, and a strange handsome gentleman, with a voice so winning as to make the blind girl declare "he must be beautiful.

SCOTTISH BALLADS AND SONGS.-Lovers of the songs and ballads of Scotland will thank us for drawing their attention to two volumes just published by Messrs. Ogle, of Glasgow; the first published by Messrs. Ogie, of Olasyow; the first containing all the choicest Songs of Scotland, arranged in chronological order, with introduction and notes, by the editor, who, with genuine modesty, is anonymous. In all, the volume of 632 pages contains nearly seven hundred songs, with parafully written notes conveying all seven with carefully written notes conveying all necessary information respecting the songs and their authorship. The volume of Ballads is somewhat thicker; and is the most satisfactory book we have seen since the time of Motherwell. We do not agree with all the editor says about the ballads, nor in his estimate of the value of Mr. Peter Buchan's literary labours, but he has clearly made ballads the subject of much thought, and is enthusiastic about them. What he says is worthy of attention, and where he makes use of the labours of others he acknowledges their source. The volumes are very cheap, and will be highly prized by all who can appreciate their excellence.

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.—Messrs. Longmans announce an interesting work to be published in October, "A Ilistory of the Gothic Revival; being an Attempt to show how far the Taste for Medieval Architecture was Retained in England during the last Two Centuries, and has been Re-developed in the Present." By Charles L. Eastlake, F.R.I.B.A., Architect; Author of "Hints on Household Taste."—Among the various contributions to Art Literature of the present day, little or no general account has hitherto appeared of the gradual but thorough change which has taken place of late years in the style of our ecclesiastical, as well as in much of our domestic, architecture. The object of this book is to describe and illustrate that change, and to point out the various causes, past and present, which have combined to bring it about.

Pro and Con is the title of a new month.

Pro and Con is the title of a new month magazine to be edited by Mr. Herbert Fry, as published by Mr. Hardwicke.

An English Boon.—The American Literary Gazette gives us the following announcement of a forthcoming work, but omits to say that the publisher in London to whose enterprise the re-issue is due is Mr. Pearson, of York Street, Covent Garden:—"Mr. J. W. Bouton, New York, will shortly publish what collectors will regard as a rare prize. It is a reprint of 'A Collection of Old Ballads, Corrected from the Best and Most Ancient Copies, with Introduction, Historical, Critical, or Humorous.' It will be issued in three 8vo volumes, printed on ribbed paper, after the antique style, and will contain 45 very curious copperplates—fac-similes of the original engravings. The book is being got up in England; Mr. Bouton being the agent for this country. Only a limited number will be printed—a few copies on large paper—and it will be issued to subscribers only. The original edition of 1723-25, of which this will be a reprint, is greatly valued by antiquarians and collectors, and the few copies which occasionally reach the auction-rooms in London realise from £10 10s. to £12 12s. If any portion of our literature be more generally interesting than another, it is ancient ballad lore. How many events, historical and domestic, do we owe the knowledge of to this source! Battles have been fought, and heroes immortalized, in its expressive and inspiring strains; and the sports, pastimes, manners, customs, and traditions of our forefathers have received from it some of their most important and curious illustrations. Scholars, critics, and antiquarians have rendered good service to literature by snatching from oblivion those precious relics of legendary poetry which would have been lost to posterity but for their well-directed labours of love. They have made us familiar with the thoughts, sympathies, and lan-guage of our ancestors. We follow them to the tournament, the border foray, the public hostelrie, and the domestic hearth. We glow with their and the domestic hearth. martial spirit and revel in their rude festivities.

THE DAWN.—This Scottish venture at witticism is no more. Our really witty contemporary, Cope's Tobacco Plant, which we have much pleasure in quoting, thus adverts to the direful catastrophe, by its Own Lempriere. "The sad event took place its Own Lempriere. on the first of July, when the subject of our notice had attained the age of three months. The Dawn, likewise known as Phaeton, was the son of S. Mungo Phoebus and Auld Reekie Clymene. By some he was said to be son of Cephalus and Aurora (Borealis), whence came his title of the Northern (rush) Light. By one writer he was assigned a Cymric origin; but these latter explanations of his birth are merely approximately approximately approximately approximately of a lively apocryphal. disposition and a handsome figure (threepence, or by post threepence halfpenny). Like other children admitted too freely to the conversation of careless adults, The Dawn sometimes spoke too broadly of things not mentionable to ears polite. This led Epaphus Argutus, son of Jupiter and Io, to rebuke The Dawn, telling him no true son of S. Mungo Phœbus would betray such indecent pride. Resolved to know his true origin, and instigated by his mother, has visited the palace of the Sun. He begged he visited the palace of the Sun. He begged Phoebus, if he really were his father, that he would give him incontestable proofs of his paternal tenderness, and convince the world of his The result of the interview was not legitimacy. very satisfactory upon this point. It is well known that about this time S. Mungo Phœbus was in the habit of accompanying Oceanus on certain very profitable buccaneering expeditions, which led him in some measure to neglect the charms of Auld Reekie Clymene. It is also true that he was ashamed of some of the sayings and doings of The Dawn, and did not wish to acknowledge him However, to please the boy, he swore by the Styx that he would grant him whatever wish he pleased to express. No sooner was the oath uttered than The Dawn conceived the idea of setting the rivers Fortha and Cleutha on fire. It is believed this desire was occasioned by his envy of Norman Mak Cloud, son of Cloud-compelling Tove. The Dawn demanded of Phoebus leave to drive the chariot of the Sun for one day, Phœbus represented the impropriety of such a request and the dangers to which it would expose him-but in vain; and as the oath was inviolable, and The Dawn unmoved, the father instructed his son how he was to proceed in his way through the regions of the air. His explicit directions were forgotten, or little attended to; and no sooner had The Dawn (otherwise Phaeton) received the reins from his father than he betrayed his ignorance and incapacity to guide the chariot. The flying horses became sensible of the confusion of their driver. The Dawn repented too late of his rashness, and already heaven and earth were threatened with a universal conflagration, when Jupiter Tobaccus Liverpudlius, who had perceived the disorder of the horses of the Sun, struck The Dawn with the incandescent stump of his cigar, and hurled him headlong from heaven into the river Pooh-pooh."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A FRESH OPENING FOR SPARE CAPITAL.

To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR,—In addition to the valuable information which THE BOOKSELLER monthly supplies upon subjects interesting to the bookselling trade, its pages are frequently embellished with "hints" and "suggestions" calculated to stimulate the enterprise and shape the movements of competing publishers.

But there is another subject which appears to have been overlooked, and which might engage the potency of your pen with profit to the class for whom it is employed—viz., how they may dispose of their remainders and surplus stock to the best advantage.

Publishing is one of the most important, yet one of the most hazardous, of commercial enterprises; for, after all the ordinary means usually employed to sell have been exhausted, there is very frequently a large remainder left on hand, with no other way for its disposal than the public auction-room; and those who have frequented those marts for the sale of books, &c. know full well that a vast quantity of quire and other stock, together with stereotypes, are often sold for less than waste paper and old metal prices; and this loss is not unfrequently due to the carelessness of the auctioneer, whose main object appears to be, not how much he can gain for his clients, but how quickly he can knock down the lots, and secure his commission on the sales.

Now it is an established fact that many persons who frequent the sales of booksellers' stock have risen into wealth and opulence by the purchase and resale of remainders. This loss to the trade would never have occurred if the auctioneer possessed a practical knowledge of the value of the goods he had to sell, and an acquaintance with the best markets where he could place them, in the event of his not having obtained a fair bidding in the public saleroom.

The sale of books is a work very dissimilar from that of other property, and requires a person specially qualified to sell by public auction.

acquaintance with literature should be upon a wide and comprehensive scale, and should extend to books in Classical, French, and German languages, knowing something of their origin, dates, contents, the editions through which they have passed, their scarcity or plenty, and how to dispose of them to the best advantage. Now the question arises, have we among our present number of auctioneers a person possessing suitable qualifications for such a position? Must not an answer be given in the negative?

Now I venture to submit that a remedy may be found to supply this deficiency, by the establishment of a firm or company which should undertake the sale of booksellers' stock, and transact all sorts of business relating to the bookselling trade, either by public auction or by private sale. Now the ordinary property of booksellers consists of copyrights, remainders, waste paper, stereo and copper plates, wood blocks, &c., and to which might be added the purchase and sale of businesses, making out balance-sheets, the arbitration of disputed questions, settling financial difficulties, arranging dissolutions of partnership, introducing partners, advancing money on stock and stores; in fact, such a firm or company would find within the scope and range of the bookselling trade a business of sufficient magnitude to employ profitably a very large amount of capital, and to command the services of a large staff of energetic and skilful talent.

Now, it is quite obvious that an association embracing the objects specified does not exist, and it is equally plain that such an organisation would be of immense advantage to the trade; and if such a scheme were proposed, there is little doubt of its being well received and supported by the general trade, and that any amount of money could be obtained from private sources; or if a company were formed, the public would readily support it. They are always willing to take shares in any company if the object is not a mere speculation, and the projectors mere men of straw.

I beg, sir, to submit to the consideration of your readers the statement of the above facts and suggestions, and to ask for them a place in the pages of THE BOOKSELLER, in order that, by ventilating the subject, opinions may be elicited.

Your obedient servant,
A DEALER IN BOOKS.

HOW TO AVOID THE BITE.

To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR,—Many of the readers of THE BOOKSELLER will remember that, in 1868, a raid was made by a London company upon retail booksellers and others in whose possession some German lithographs were found. The London company—whose name, being often before the public in connection with that hostile proceeding, need not be mentioned here—declared that some of these German reprints were an infringement upon their copyright property, and demanded compensation. One of those troublesome prints found in my possession, was purchased by a representative of the London company, who demanded £10 compensation; but which, after some correspondence—in which I was reminded of the law's relentless course—was reduced to £3; which, believing the outside of the law the best side, I paid. For the information of those who may be as innocent as I was about any infringement of copyright, it is necessary to say that I bought that offensive print from a hawker, one of many who were then selling them throughtuthe country. These hawkers—who, for some time after the London company's raid, almost entirely disappeared from our streets—are again on the road, inducing people ignorant of copyright to put themselves into the power of the law as used by that London company.

While the inefficient state of the law allows these German lithograph prints to be imported and hawked about by pedlars who dispose of them to small booksellers and newsagents, who use them to furnish their shop-windows as well as to turn an honest penny, but who, in their innocence of copyright infringement, are liable to be dropped upon any day by a London company, it is only fair to put retail booksellers and others upon their guard, in order that in future they may not, like myself, be compelled to declare themselves one of those that have been ONCE BITTEN.

OBITUARY.

June 13, at Melbourne, Australia, Mr. H. T. Dwight, a well-known and highly-respected second-hand bookseller. He had been suffering more or less from asthma for years, an attack of which terminated his existence, after an illness of about a fortnight. Mr. Dwight was remarkable for both private benevolence and public As regards the former, the contributor of this notice is aware of numerous instances proving that prosperity and fifteen thousand miles of distance did not, in his mind, annihilate the claims of necessitous friends and connections at home. To illustrate the latter, may be quoted the following, from the Melbourne Argus:—"We are informed that Mr. Dwight has in his will bequeathed his property to the University of Melbourne in reversion upon his wife's decease. A life interest is secured to Mrs. Dwight, and afterwards it is provided that the property shall be vested in the trustees of the University, the annual proceeds to be divided into money prizes of not less than £25 each, to be given 'for the advancement and encouragement of learning in ancient history, constitutional and legal history, and natural philosophy, or for such other branches of the University education as the said trustees of the University education as the said trustees may in their discretion think the said prizes most applicable and advantageous, which several prizes it is my will and desire shall be called the "Dwight Prize" in such branches." A Melbourne correspondent informs us that Mr. Dwight leaves a widow, but no children, and that the property bequeathed as above is said to be of the value of £6,000. Speaking of his personal traits he says—"Dwight was not a man one would meet with every day, being genial and kindly, and with an element of individuality in him, and a good intellect; a rare fellow to tell a story, with a wonderful memory for little incidents occurring in his interviews with people, and a keen observer of men and their ways. He was (as became a second-hand bookseller) a keen fellow to make a Many old acquaintances at home will bargain."

July 4.—At Clontarf, Ireland, aged 62, Mr. James Duffy, publisher, of Wellington Quay, Dublin, and Paternoster Row, London. In Mr. Duffy Ireland has lost her most prominent publisher, and one of her most worthy citizens. He was much respected by all who knew him as an upright honest man of business, and much beloved by all who had any more intimate acquaintance with him. He had acquired considerable property entirely by his own exertions, and the following brief outline of his business life will serve to convince his fellow countrymen the wrongs and Celtic rights, they will appeared to business, they may not only respected to the server of the server o former, but make us respect the latter. James Duffy was born in 1809, at Shercock, County Monaghan, and when very young was apprenticed to a local draper and general shopkeeper, with whom he remained some years; afterwards, we believe, he obtained employment in Dublin. While in this city and previously, being fond of reading, he had expended his small savings in picking up old books on the quays and elsewhere, twopence or threepence at a time being the usual extent of his outlay; but sometimes it amounted to a shilling. The times were bad, and apparently were getting worse, and Duffy determined to emigrate; but as he had not the means of doing so, he determined to sell his hoard of books to raise the means; he accordingly took two or three sack-loads of books to an auctioneer who had an evening sale; and then, to his astonishment, he saw that books originally costing pence now produced as many shillings. The produce of the sale was considerable—considerable to one who a few days before had not five pounds in the world-and the thought struck him that he would not go to America after all; he could do as well in Ireland as anywhere. cordingly he turned his money into books and sold them again. Considerable efforts were being made at this time by the Tract and other Societies to convert the natives, and large numbers of Bibles and Testaments were distributed. Duffy went round the country and bought them up. These, with a fresh stock of books, he took over to England and sold there. While hawking his books about he became acquainted with the wants of the country, and saw what kind of books suited the masses. His first settled place of business was in Anglesea Street, Dublin, where he began publishing a series of works known by the name of "Brutons." They consisted of "Freney the Robber," "Wonderful Adventures of Highwaymen," "The Battle of Aughrim," &c.; and selling at about twopence each, had a wonderful amount of success. We believe that some cheap books of prayer were also published by him. In 1842 the Repeal agitation began to attract notice, and Mr. Duffy, who threw all his energies into it, was appointed publisher, and produced the well-known series of books called "The Library of Ireland," a series which future collectors will consider cheap at five guineas a volume. They were published at 15., and consisted of "The Spirit of the Nation," "Davis's Poems," "National Ballads," and other works appealing to the hearts of the people. They were edited or produced by some of the cleverest Irishmen of the day; amongst them Mr. C. Gavan Duffy, to whom the Repealers thought Mr. Duffy was related. Duffy, however, was shrewd enough to see that no good would come of the movement. Its promoters and leaders were too hot-brained, too self-conceited, and, although honest and well-intentioned as far as the object in view was concerned, could never be successful. Duffy saw this, and cooled down. The movement collapsed, as he saw that it would; and he then turned his attention to more ambitious publications. He brought out editions of Carleton, Banim, and other celebrities, and was apparently on his road to fortune. But bad times were at hand: the horrible famine of 1846 deprived people of the means of pur-chasing books, and Duffy saw his warehouse crowded with stock, which he had no means of selling; consequently he could not meet his engagements. He had no alternative but to call his creditors together, and ask for time. He would and could pay everybody in full; but not Time was granted, and the money owing was to be paid by instalments. Duffy came over to England, and disposed of his copyrights and other most available property, and drained himself to pay the first instalment. The second was coming due, and there was no possibility of paying itnobody wanted books; no money came in; bankruptcy stared him in the face. Heartbroken, he went a few miles from Dublin to seek a shelter for his wife and young family during the break-up now inevitable, and returned to his place of business at Wellington Quay. His wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, met him, and said that John Donnegan, a neighbour, had been in to inquire after him. Just at that moment John himself came in with "Well, pemmy, my boy, how're ye getting on?" "Oh, badly," was the reply; "it's all over." "How much do ye want?" was the next question: to which the reply was "a whole pot of money; but it's useless bothering me about it; I'm ruined." Donnegan ran out, and in a few minutes ruthed it again rath blitable. minutes rushed in again with literally a stocking full of money,—notes, gold, silver, copper, all jumbled together. Throwing this down upon the table, he said, "Just take that, and see if it's any use to ye." He again rushed out, refusing to take any receipt or account of it, but merely "pay me when ye can." Duffy was astonished, as well he might be, and looked upon Donnegan as an angel sent specially from heaven. He knew that he was a careful, saving man, but had no notion that he had amassed so much wealth. The stocking contained nearly £1200, and its contents served to meet the payments falling due, and Mr. Duffy was again a happy man. It is needless to say that worthy John Donnegan was repaid, and if Duffy's blessings have been of service in the country to which he has since been removed, he will have had a large quantity; for Duffy was not the man to forget a favour. Having got over this crisis, Mr. Duffy, made wiser by the events of the past, now remodelled his business. Leaving the rubbish to others, he turned his attention to more solid books, including editions of the Douay Bible, Missals, Prayer-books, Lives of Saints, and some very creditable historical books. About ten years 200 he opened a house in London, which for a long time was under the management of Mr. Marsh. On one of his visits to this city he had the misfortune to injure his leg—an accident from which he never recovered. Illness, the loss of his wife, and some other afflictions damped his publishing ardour, and for the past three or four years he had rather confined himself to the working off his old stock than to the production of new. Few men have been more useful to their country than Mr. Duffy. He was a genuine Irish gentleman-a gentleman of Nature's own creation - honest, upright, genial, ready to help others, and with never a bad word for any.

The business will, for the next two years, be carried on in Mr. Duffy's name; after that by his two sons, who will, we hope, shed a fresh lustre upon their father's name.

July. — At his residence, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, Dr. Thomas Hawkes Tanner. In the field of medical literature no greater loss could have been sustained than that of this eminent physician. We venture to predict that his "Practice of Medicine," which in a few years has reached its sixth edition, developing gradually from a small pocket volume to its present form of two portly octavos, of which we are informed the large impression of 5000 was struck off, will remain for generations to come—as it is now regarded—the standard text-book of medical science. Numerous other successful works, well known to most of our readers, testify to the author's industry. We doubt whether any man ever before attained at such an early age—he had not completed his 47th year-so high an eminence as a writer and practitioner in medicine. By his very large and ever-extending circle of patients, Dr. Tanner was much beloved. He possessed, in a high degree, the admirable art, in a medical man, of creating in the mind of each of his patients the impression that his was the case which occupied the first place in his thoughts, and thus invariably obtained his utmost confidence. No one ever left the wellknown consulting room in Henrietta Street without feeling that he had been in communion with a master-mind, and without the comforting assurance that medical skill and knowledge, in their highest, fullest, and latest development, were being exercised in his behalf. Children, who were the objects of his especial care and solicitude, ever regarded him with affection and confidence. "Dear Dr. Tanner is coming to-day," or, "We are going to see dear, kind Dr. Tanner," were expressions familiar to the ears of many parents. How different from the state of affairs in our younger days, when "the doctor" was the terror of the nursery, and ranked with beadles, bogies, and other such-like bugbears! This notice is the less unsuited to our columns inasmuch as we happen to know that among the ranks of the publishing, bookselling, and allied trades, Dr. Tanner possessed quite a numerous clientèle. Several members of them paid their tribute of respect for the memory of their departed physician by attending his funeral at Highgate cemetery on the 13th of July.

July 28th.—At St. George's Road, Regent's Park, aged 54, Mr. Thomas A. Otton, a gentleman well known and much respected as the representative of Messrs. Rivingtons, Messrs. Bentley and Son, and several other houses. Mr. Otton was born in London in 1817, and about the year 1834 entered the house of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., but removed thence in 1839 to Messrs. Whittaker, where he remained for nearly eighteen years. He then commenced travelling for Messrs. W. and R. Chambers, and after a while added other commissions. His health failing him, he has of late been aided by his friend Mr.

Aug. 8.—At Bolton, aged 39, William, second son of Mr. George Winterburn, bookseller. In early life he was apprenticed to Mr. Thomas Morris, letterpress printer, Oxford Street, and immediately after the completion of his apprenticeship he became one of the active assistants in his father's extending business, and continued as such up to his illness, six months ago. Deceased, by his attention and courtesy, won for himself the general esteem of those with whom he came into contact.

Aug. 25.—At his residence, Edith Road, Nunhead, aged 32, from paralysis of the heart, Mr. William Cecil Clark, of the firm of Westleys and Co., bookbinders, Friar Street, Blackfriars.

August 26.—In Switzerland, Mr. Charles Scribner, of New York. We copy the following from the Publishers' Circular, and unite with our contemporary in expressing our regret at Mr. Scribner's death, and in estimate of his high worth:—"The numerous friends of this gentleman in Europe, and England in particular, will learn with deep regret of his death, at the comparatively early age of 50 years. Those who knew him best will most severely feel his loss; and as the head of the publishing and importing firms of Charles Scribner and Co. and Scribner, Welford, and Co., no man could stand higher in public esteem or reputation for honourable dealing. At the present moment we are not enabled to add anything in the way of biography, though possibly we may return to the subject. Mr. Scribner had for a long time been a sufferer, and was sojourning in Switzerland, in company with his brother, the Rev. William Scribner. His death was communicated to Mr. Welford, his partner, by telegram. He died on Saturday, August 26. Mr. Scribner's delicate state of health had for some time prevented him from participating actively in his business. This will suffer

August 30.—At Paris, aged 77, Paul de Kock, the eminent French novelist. Intended for a commercial life, Paul de Kock early turned his attention to literature. In 1814 he produced his first romance, "L'Enfant de ma Femme," which, however, was not received with any degree of favour. Little annoyed at his want of success, Paul tried the stage; and subsequently continued at this description of work until 1823, with more or less success, writing meanwhile several novels, such as "Georgette," "Gustave, ou le Mauvais Sujet," and "Frère Jacques." In 1824 he produced "Le Barbier de Paris," "Jean," and "Le Cocu." In 1836 his style of composition greatly altered—in the opinion of many for the worse, there being in his future works less characteristic French gaiety and general naturalness, and a greater tendency to wild exaggeration. Paul de Kock also composed many successful dramas and comedies between the years 1834 and 1864.

STATIONERS' COMPANY.—The following members of the Company of Stationers have died during the year ended August 1st, 1871:—Sir William Magnay, Bart.; Messrs. W. J. Delancy Arnold, James Whiting, Benjamin Bensley, James Imray, John Lucas Houghton, Howell R. Rowland, William Young Taylor, Edward Lycett, James Jameson Waterlow, and Henry E. Walden.

A Handbook of Legendary and Mythological Art. By Clara Erskin Clement. (New York: Hurd and Houghton.) Post 8vo.—In a beautifully printed and compact volume of 510 pages, Mrs. Clement has given us the substance of Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art, and of the Legends relative to the Saints of the Madonna, and of Our Lord and His Disciples. Six guineas' worth for a few shillings! The abridgement has been made in a loving, loyal manner by one imbued with the same spirit as that breathed by Mrs. Jameson, and although we here lose the charming legends of the original, we get their spirit. The illustrations are evidently electrotyped from the originals. The volume is of that covetable nature that we could almost wish ourselves citizens of that free and enlightened country where any man may appropriate matter without fear of infringing copyright laws!

A New Manual of Book-keeping, for Wholesale and Retail Dealers. By Philip Crellin, Public Accountant. (Bell and Daldy.)—Nothing seems more simple, in theory, than book-keeping by double entry, every individual transaction being faithfully recorded on both the debit and credit sides of the ledger; but in practice it is found that there exist various drawbacks to its usefulness, so that, except among bankers and traders whose transactions are expressed in large sums of money, single entry, or a modification of it, is the most generally adopted. Mr. Crellin in this Manual endeavours to popularize a method of book-keeping which combines the advantages while aving the inconveniences of both systems. Far as we can judge by a cursory examit the set of accounts given in illustration of he has fairly succeeded.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Balaustion's Adventures: including a Tran-By Robert Browning. script from Euripides. (Smith, Elder, and Co.)—Balaustion, "the wild pomegranate flower," is a native of Rhodes; and when, in the heat of the Peloponnesian war, the Athenian cause is failing, and the Rhodians resolve to take the side of Sparta, the girl repudiates the thought of treason, and with her kinsmen sails for the Piræus. The wind is contrary, and the ship is driven hither and thither for many days, till the crew lose all knowledge of their whereabouts. Land at last appears in sight, but they are pursued by pirates, and unable to make the shore. Then Balaustion rushes to the "altar by the mast," and invokes the aid of heaven in the song said to have been sung at Salamis. After incredible labour they reach the land, only to discover themselves in Syracuse, where the Athenians, after being descated, are detained as prisoners of war. Balaustion's song has proved them to be well disposed towards the Athenians, and as the crew are forbidden to enter the harbour, they must e'en face the pirate, whose barque lies just outside. With sorrow and despair they turn just outside. With sorrow and despair they turn to depart, when suddenly one in a galley near inquires whether, as they know Æschylus so intimately, they have any knowledge of the "newer bard," Euripides. Then,—
"At mention of Euripides
The captain crowed out, 'Euoi, praise the god! Oop, boys, bring our owl-shield to the fore!
Out with the sacred anchor! Here she stands, Balaustion! Strangers, greet the lyric girl!"

Sing them a strophe, with the turn-again Down to the verse that ends all proverb-like; And save us, thou Balaustion, bless the name!"

But, better than that, the girl offers to recite

That strangest, saddest, sweetest song of his, ALKENTIS, which was taught long years ago at Athens." "The main of a whole play, from first to last

The offer is at once accepted; and so, Because Greeks are Greeks, and hearts are hearts,

And poetry is power, the crew are welcomed to Syracuse; and Balaustion, standing on the steps of the temple, recites the whole poem, till at last she and her companions are allowed to depart,

"With good words and great wishes."

This is the adventure which Balaustion relates to her friends on her return-a mere frame, but what a frame !- to enclose the Transcript from Euripides. Of the latter it may be said that nothing finer has proceeded from Mr. Browning's pen. In truth, the poet sees more in his play than Euripides ever placed there—a great humanity, belonging rather to our time than to that of the ancient Greeks. Like Mr. Leighton, whose picture in this year's Academy seems, at the instance of Lady Cowper, to have suggested the work, Mr. Browning sees in the "Alcestis" of Euripides a hint of "That brave Bounty of poets, the one royal race That ever was, or will be, in the world."

And in this new version of the story: how the wife died for her husband, and thus appeased the shade of her father-it is familiar to every lover of classic fable—we have an elaboration of the notion of Hercules being the Helper of the world.

"Gladness be with thee, Helper of our world."
I think this is the authentic sign and seal
Of godship, that it ever waxes glad
And most glad, until gladness blossoms, bursts
Into a rage to suffer for mankind,
And recommence at sorrew." To further describe the poem would necessitate more elaborate quotation than our space admits. We may only add, then, that it concludes with a description of Mr. Leighton's picture, as a tribute to

> "Euripides the Human, With his droppings of warm tears, And his touches of things common Till they rose to touch the spheres."

Guesses at Truth. By Two Brothers. "Golden Treasury Series." (Macmillan and Co.)—We can scarcely do better than turn back to our own pages, where, twelve years ago, in noticing a preceding edition of these "Guesses," we said:—"In the modern prose literature of England we know of nothing, but some of the table-talk and literary remains of Coleridge, worthy to be compared for degree and kind of merit than these extraordinary In every aphorism, essay, dissertation, there is invariably some new truth which seems to have been freshly drawn from the bottom of the well in which we are taught to think so much of the invaluable treasure lies hidden. deep thought, a charming ever-ready fancy, and a ceaseless flow of high and pure feeling, proclaim on every page that the authors of the book were poets and philosophers and pious men, pouring forth, for the delight and benefit of others, the riches of their own minds, not literary handicraftsmen dexterously working at their trade. The subject of the 'Guesses' comprises, we believe, almost every conceivable theme in which Truth can be at all concerned. From Lot's wife to love, or from a star shining through a hedge to the grandest doctrines and designs of Christianity, there is something graceful to be listened to, and something good and useful to be learned. The wisdom and the gracefulness are predominating qualities within the authors' own minds, and naturally flow out in all their strength and sweetness in whatever issues from them. One of the authors, it is evident, belongs-along with Mr. Walter Savage Landor-to that class of writers who have been called by Mr. De Quincey, 'Orthographic Mutineers;' but in spite of an occasional shock from some manifestation of this sad rebellious disposition, the 'Guesses' are extremely well written; in a style as sweet and flexible, and pure and clear as that of Landor or of Southey in their happiest veins. In all respects, indeed, it is an exquisite book; one of those which will always be regarded lovingly alike by thinkers and by scholars, by poets and by men of taste.

The Poetry of Creation. By Nicholas Michell (Tegg.)—Revised, enlarged, and carefully announced to the control of the control o tated, this poem, which forms the second volume of the author's collected works, describes the wonders, the glories, and the beauties of the heavens; and it is not too much to say that the theme which attracted the genius of Milton and engaged the pen of Dante, has been worthily treated—not, indeed, in the lofty and sublime spirit of his exemplars, but still with imaginative earnestness and intellectual skill.

The Legends of Chellenham and Gloucestershire: Being Sketches in Verse of the Tragic and Comic Tales of this Locality; together with Humorous and other Poems, Sonnets, &c. ByWilliam Byme (Cheltenham: S. H. Brookes.)—Better than the legends—some of which, however, are very entertaining—are the original verses to be found in this little volume. Especially good are a parody on Longfellow's "Excelsior," and "Lines to a Nightcap;" while some of the "Sonnets for the Time" are really written on the approved model, with a quality often found wanting in modern sonnets-namely, intelligent ideas.

The Book of Authors. A Collection of Criticisms, Ana, Mots, Personal Descriptions, &c., wholly referring to English Men of Letters in Every Age of English Literature. By W. Clark Russell. (Warne and Co.)—This new volume of the "Chandos Library" recommends itself to readers of taste; and when we learn that the design of the compiler is to "present specimens of some of the smart and piquant things that have been said by literary men and women of one another," our expectations are proportionally raised, and we promise ourselves a real treat. But—and it unfortunately happens that a "but" or an "if" will protrude itself, despite the critic's most favourable intentions—the promise of the most tavourable intentions—the promise of the title-page is only partially fulfilled. We have all noticed how some painters delight in putting small designs upon great canvases. Carried out in the spirit in which it was evidently projected, this book would have been delightful; as it is, it is rather disappointing. We all like to know the transport thinks of love. for instance, what Tennyson thinks of Lord Lytton, and here we get the Poet-Laureate's opinion in two words—"You band-box!"—words which, without any kind of explanation as to the circumstances which gave them birth, are, to say the least of it, puzzling. Literary men will remember that the words quoted are from Tennyson's rejoinder in Punch—the only time the Poet-Laureate ever wrote in that periodical—to Lord Lytton's attack upon "Miss Alfred" in "The New Timon." Again, something better might be said of Theodore Hook than the story of his practical jokes, his debts, and his extravagances. The large majority of extracts, too, convey no exact information. Quotations from the Times or the Edinburgh Review, without dates, are as annoying as those other quotations from the "Percy Anecdotes" or "Mr. Timbs." All that we find about Mr. Heraud is contained in eight lines of verse addressed by him to L. E. L., though the veteran poet and journalist has been before the public for nearly half a century. Two lines are sufficient for Robert Bell, while no single word is to be found relating to such eminent and well-known modern writers as Professor Aytoun, Harrison Ainsworth, Sir A. Alison, Dean Alford, the author of "Festus," Robert Browning, Dr. Darwin, the late Earl Derby, Rev. Alexander Dyce, William Jerdan, Rev. John Keble, Dr. Norman Macleod, Theodore Martin, or the Hon. Mrs. Norton; though surely an industrious compiler might have discovered in current literature and journalism plenty to tell us of their ways, and no end of criticisms on their works. On the other hand, however, we have abundance of anecdote and opinion respecting the productions of the old writers, and the literary men contemporary with Byron, Scott, Coleridge, Wordsworth, and with Byron, Scott, Coleridge, wordsworth, and Southey; with much pleasant, and some sharp, criticism from divers pens. Mr. Russell has done well to include among "English Men of Letters" such names as Longfellow, Lowell, Poe, Bryant, and Dr. Wendell Holmes, who, though American by birth, are altogether English in language and sentiment. Ever since Isaac D'Israeli led the way, curiosities of literature have been exceed. way, curiosities of literature have been exceed-ingly popular. People like to know as much as they can of their favourite authors; and in this book they will at least get such a taste of literary gossip as cannot but make them desire a full and

The Member for Paris. A Tale of the Second Empire. By Trois-Etoiles. Three vols. (Smith, Elder, and Co.)—Three Stars tells an interesting story, the plot of which so depends upon small incidents as to be entirely beyond description. To say that a French nobleman declines to occupy his rightful place in society because of his republican principles; that his sons tho-roughly sympathise with him, and prefer to live by their own labours—the one as a barrister, the other as a journalist—rather than eat the bread of splendid idleness; that one of the brothers falls in love with, and marries, the lovely daughter of a political renegade; and that the bride and bridegroom die, unexpectedly, at the end of the third volume—is to say all that can be said of the plot. But then much might be written of the way in which the author describes Parisian life and manners, especially those of the Bohemian class; of his contempt for the Emperor and the Second Empire, and of his admiration for republican principles apart from the excesses which appear indissolubly wedded to republicanism. All this, and much more, will be discovered by the reader who has the courage to conquer the opening chapters, which, in truth, are not lively. The story, however, is one which it is impossible to dismiss with mere conventional praise. It is a political novel of a character distinct from anything with which Mr. Mudie's customers are familiar. There are no flowery descriptions of high life and fashionable people, as in Mr. Disraeli's political fictions; no long-winded arguments about this or that popular topic; and no attempt at fine writing. But there is—as we read it—underlying all the small talk and little incidents, a determined opposition to that system of paternal government which has just come to a miserable end in France, and an undisguised admiration for that philosophical republicanism, so attractive to young minds, which greatly influenced the writers and thinkers in the time of the First Revolution, and which fascinated our own Coleridge and his literary contemporaries.

Coleringe and his interary contemporaries.

The Pictorial Table Book, 4to (Virtue), edited by Mr. James Dafforne, is now published in monthly parts at two shillings. Each part contains eight steel-plate engravings, with descriptive letterpress.

Noble Love, and Other Poems. By Colin Rac-Brown. (Skeffington.)—The old, old story—with a variation—is related in this poem: how a girl and boy grew up together, and each learned to think the other noblest and best:—

"The gentle boy became an ardent youth, The gentle Edith grew to womanhood;" when a shadow fell across their path, and dispelled their youthful dream. The father had found another suitor for the fair girl, and the youth, out of pure love for her, left the field to his rival, and went out into the world a lonely man. The story is well told in musical lines, which shows that Mr. Rae-Brown, if he does not imitate, has at least a loving acquaintance with "Maud" and the best of Tennyson's verse. Some fifty shorter poems, in various metres, go to make up a volume which, in these days of respectable mediocrity, cannot but attract some notice.

The Swedish Singer. By Mrs. W. G. Hall. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—Vanda Rosendahl is a peasant girl with flaxen hair, a homely face, and an enchantingly sweet voice. Like another Swedish singer, of whom the world has heard much, she succeeds in attracting almost universal attention in the capitals of Europe; and then, at the very height of her fame, subsides into the quietude of domestic life. But not so happily; for an old romance of her girlhood rises up to trouble her peace; and—but we will not relate the final incident; for to do so, without also describing the steps by which it was reached, won be an injustice to the author, and a disapment to the reader; to whom we recommend as a well-told and exceedingly interesting so Stories of French School Life. By Ascott R. Hope. (Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.)—Having made a reputation as a writer for English boys Mr. Hope bethought him that it would be well to describe school-life in France; and for that purpose consulted various French fictions. But he found no "Tom Brown" in foreign literature, and so, instead of translating, he has borrowed, adapted, and invented the incidents which appear in the three stories now published. The French, he tells us, "indulge in more sentiment than we do about the happiness of boyhood and youth in the abstract, but as a matter of fact, a French schoolboy's life is much less enjoyable than that of Master John Bull. The free air, the constitutional system of government which, with the happiest results, becomes more and more characteristic of our schools, are little known in France, where the rising generation is "cribbed, cabined, and confined" in a shameful way. School there is made as much a prison as pos-Thus boys, shut up within dusty courts to sickening, driven in herds to work long hours in whitewashed schoolrooms, spurred on, usherridden, almost forced to deceit by constant restriction and punishment, with their spirits crushed or soured, or unhealthily fettered by the most unnatural system of discipline under this paternal government, are not likely to look back upon their school days with much pride and pleasure. Hence in his three stories—"The New Master," "The New Book"—we find no stirring account of a cricket match, a game at foot-ball, or a steeple-chase; but, instead, a description, which we presume to be accurate, of the many crosses and troubles which little Frenchmen have to bear at school. The stories, nevertheless, are very interesting, and very nicely illustrated.

The English Poems of George Herbert: Together with his Collection of Proverbs entitled "Jacula Prudentum." (Rivingtons.)—This new edition of George Herbert is printed uniformly with the "Imitation of Christ," and other volumes of Messrs. Rivingtons' elegant series of devotional works. Herbert needs no commendation, but in this form he will commend himself to all lovers of pretty presentation volumes.

Low's Educational Catalogue.—Mr. Walter Low has compiled a classified Catalogue of Educational Works in use in Great Britain in the early part of 1871. Altogether the titles number nearly nine thousand; they are each compressed into one line, and have the price and publisher's name attached. Wherever copies are to be found in the South Kensington Museum the letters "S. K." are attached. Max Krömer, a Story of the Siege of Strasbourg. (Religious Tract Society.)—The author of "Little Meg's Children," and other stories for the young, begins this tale in the good old-fashioned style: "It is I, Max Krömer, who will tell you the history of the six weeks' siege of Strasbourg, and of the trouble and danger we passed through last year." And from that starting point the tale goes on, with much of Max Krömer's domestic history coming, naturally enough, between the acts of the

The Pearl of Story Books. (Nelson and Sons.)

The stories strung together in this series are inpure stories. Some of the most beautiful atives of the Old Testament—the histories of peph, of Daniel, of David, for instance—are ere printed in connected form, without the interuption of chapter and verse. A few details have uption of chapter and verse. A few details have some cases been omitted; but, as a rule, the missima verba of the Scriptures have been adhered throughout.

Famous Women and Heroes. A Poem in Seven Parts, Altered from the Author's "Spirits of the Past," New Characters being introduced. By Nicholas Michell, Author of "Ruins of Many Lands," &c. The Cheap Edition. (W. Tegg.)— More than twenty years ago Mr. Nicholas Michell wrote the poem by which he is best known—"Ruins of Many Lands." This was followed at intervals by the "Poetry of Creation," "Sybil of Cornwall," "The Immortals," "Pleasure," and "Minor Poems." Some of the volumes have passed through several editions. It has now been determined to issue the whole of them as a cheap uniform series, of which the present is the first instalment. With a praiseworthy desire to render his poems acceptable to the public, Mr. Michell, following the example of the Poet-Laureate, has thoroughly revised them; and, in some cases,—of which "Famous Women and Heroes" is an instance—altogether re-cast, enlarged, and improved them. The famous women selected are Helen of Troy, Aspasia, Lucretia, Paulina, Esther, Beatrice, Laura, Lady Jane Grey, and Mary Antoinette, among others; while in the list of heroes we find Leonidas, Miltiades, Alexander, Cæsar, Hannibal, Richard Cœur de Lion, Washington, and Napoleon the Great; the several circumstances and incidents of their lives alluded to in the poem, being all elucidated in notes at the end of the volume, which is neatly printed and com-plete in itself. Of the literary value of the poems themselves it is unnecessary now to speak, for they have long ago made their mark in the world.

Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. By William Carleton. (Tegg.)-In his amusing introduction to the present edition of his well-known stories, Mr. Carleton complains that the Irishman of fiction is always made ridiculous, and that "from the immortal Bard of Avon down to the writers of the present day neither play nor farce has ever been presented to Englishmen in which, when an Irishman is introduced, he is not drawn as a broad, grotesque blunderer." Now, this is scarcely fair, for no Irishman appears in any play of Shakespeare; and in the modern dramas of Boucicault, Falconer, and others, the Irishman, so far from being an awkward blunderer, is a great hero, the soul of heroism, and the incarnation of wit. Mr. Carleton, in a long autobiographical note, gives us the history of his stories, and his own notions of the peculiarities in his countrymen's character. This new edition is, therefore, doubly valuable and interesting Captain Alston's Seamanship. - New Edition, revised and enlarged by Commander R. H. Harris, R.N., with a Treatise on Nautical Surveying by Staff-Commander May, F.R.G.S.; also Instructions for Officers of the Merchant Service, by W. H. Rosser. With Two Hundred Illustrations. (Portsea Griffin and Co.)—No better work upon its special Griffin and Co.)—No better work aport topic has ever appeared than "Alston's Seaman-ship," which is here revised, enlarged, and ship," With modernized by competent practical men. this volume in hand no young sailor need in future plead ignorance of the "rule of the road," the mode of reefing and taking in sail, shifting rudders, working ship, broaching to, casting the lead, of any other of the usual operations on board ship. From this work he may learn the use of the barometer, and obtain a good practical introduction to nautical astronomy; to say nothing of much useful information on knotting and splicing, mat-making, and other incidents of his profession; with a thorough insight of the real hard work indispensably necessary for all those who "go down to the sea in ships.

The Phanix, a monthly magazine for China, Japan, and Eastern Asia, edited by the Rev. James Summers, Professor of the Chinese language, &c., King's College, has just completed its first yearly volume. Designed to provide information as to the religions, languages, and customs of the Eastern nations, the Phanix is a highly useful, though unpretentious, work. In addition to papers on Buddhist Philosophy, the Languages of Nepaul, Mongol and Chinese Literature, &c., it contains an Oriental romance, and various illustrations of Eastern manners in the shape of legends, ballads, and anecdotes, some of them printed in the characters of the tongues in which they have been found. It is a remarkable fact that, extended as is our commerce and influence, we know next to nothing of the governmental, educational, and social systems of the Orientals. Any work, therefore, which adds to our knowledge should be welcomed alike by statesmen and scholars.

Camp Life, as Seen by a Civilian. A Personal Narrative. By George Buchanan, A.M. (Glasgow: James Maclure.)—During the Crimean war the writer held a temporary commission as surgeon to the camp hospitals; and, being thrown into strange scenes among strange people, he did what many others in similar circumstances have donekept a diary. In this he noted down all that struck him as novel or interesting; and now, after a lapse of fifteen years, he prints it, handsomely. The diary is so good that we may echo the sentiments of the writer's friends and express our regret that it was not printed before.

The Cousin from India. A Story for Girls. By Georgiana M. Craik. (Low and Co.)—This, the second volume of the series of girls' books edited by the author of "John Halifax," is a complete contrast to "Little Sunshine's Holiday." There we had the sayings and doings of one attractive child; here we have the story of a whole family of children, full of wholesome fun, with now and then a graceful little touch of pathos. Elfie, "the Cousin from India," is a small, neat, demure little damsel, sly, mischievous, and not particularly truthful. In the improvement of this little Elfie's moral nature we find the purpose of the story. But was it necessary, in order to accomplish that desirable end, that Wee Davie, the child-hero, should die? Prettily told as the story is, we fear that when young folk read it they will put the question so often asked by them, in reference to the tracts of the religious societies—"Why do all the good children die—can't they be made better and live?" There are three illustrations to the text, but they are drawn and engraved in that hard black-and-white style which, though fashionable, is anything but attractive.

though fashionable, is anything but attractive. We Girls. A Home Story. By Adeline D. T. Whitney. (Low and Co.)—"We Girls" is a story told partly by one member of the family, partly by another. The mother, a good, kindly personage, full of frankness and good humour, is included by her daughters in the title "We Girls." There is no plot, and the incidents are not sensational or even striking. The little pleasures, jealousies, hopes, and disappointments of an American family of grown or growing up girls, not too well off in the world's goods, are well described in a book we can recommend as chatty, interesting, and wholesome.

The Little Cowslip Gatherers. By Esther Copley. (Edinburgh: Gall and Inglis.)—"What a Penny will do," is told in this little story in a way that will recommend it to boys and girls of all conditions in life; for the penny is, after all, but a typical coin for the enforcement of prudence, moderation, and economy.

I hilip Stone and His Companions. By Mrs. M. E. Bewsher. (A. G. Dennant.)—"The wicket opened; and there stood their prodigal son." Of course he was received in the good old fashion; the fatted calf was killed for his repast, and tears of joy were shed, and his innocence of the crime of which he had been accused, and for which he had suffered, was fully proved. The incidents that lead up to this result are just such as might have happened; which, indeed, do frequently happen to many bold, thoughtless lads. They are very well and naturally told; and the story, prettily illustrated, cannot fail to interest young readers.

Common Sense in the Household: a Manual of Practical Housewifery. By Marion Harland. (New York: C. Scribner and Co.)—Of cookery-books there is no end; but here is a volume that tells us all about cookery, and something more. From a haunch of venison to lamb's kidney, from turtle soup to mutton broth, from raised pies to pancakes, and from baron of beef to pig's trotters, we have full and complete directions for their preparation and service at the table, with much curious information about pumpkin-pies, hominy, flapjacks, summer-squash, clam chow-der, bonney clabber (or what in Devonshire is known as "junket"), buckwheat cakes, waffles, cookies, nuckleberry, molasses candy, and other American dishes. There are also directions for the making of all kinds of delicious summer drinks, cooling wheys and jellies for the sickroom, preserves, ices, pickles, custards, sauces, omelettes, salads, &c., intermingled with good advice for the management of the household, the hire of servants, the preservation of furniture and clothing,-altogether one of the most complete and instructive volumes that a young housewife could wish to possess.

Origin of Language and Myths. By Morgan Kavanagh. 2 vols. (Low, Son, and Marston.)—Attached to the title-page we find this notice:
—"Copies of this work are, with the author's respects, presented to several literary reviews and scientific institutions, in the hopes that, considering the importance of its subject, it may, for the sake of truth and science, be thoroughly and critically investigated. The principal parts of all such notices—whether favourable or adverse—shall, while received with thanks, be inserted and freely commented on, in a small volume or brochure, to be entitled 'An Author his own Reviewer.'" We are sorry that The Bookseller is too much crowded with other matter to do full justice to the merits of Mr. Kavanagh's volumes, and therefore content ourselves with the mere announcement of their publication.

An Introduction to the Duties of Magistrates and Justices of the Peace. By Sir P. Benson Maxwell, Kt., of the Middle Temple, Barrister, and Chief Justice of the Straits' Settlements. Edited by L. P. Delves Broughton, Esq., Administrator-General of Bengal, and late Recorder of Rangoon. (Calcutta, Bombay, and London: Thacker and Co.)—In India the term Magistrate has a wider signification than it has with us at home; and in this treatise the duties, responsibilities, powers, and methods of procedure belonging to and adopted by the magistracy of British India are more particularly discussed. Dividing the subject into distinct headings—as, the limits of the magistrate's jurisdiction, his method of summary proceeding, his powers of preventing breaches of the peace, and dealing with offenders against the crimilaw, &c.—the author has produced a which will doubtless be highly useful to every statement of fact or opinion being by a case or cases cited.

The Story of Harecourt: Being the History of an Independent Church. By John B. Marsh, Author of "Wise Sayings of the Great and Good," &c. With an Introduction by the Rev. Alex. Raleigh, D.D. (Strahan.)—Harecourt is the historic title of a congregation of Independents in Canonbury, Islington; the name itself being derived from a little court near Aldersgate Street, in the City of London, a locality famous in the early history of Nonconformity. The first congregation of Harecourt was formed in 1648, by the Rev. George Cockayn, who was ejected from his living as "Minister of Pancras, Soper-lane," to which he had been appointed by Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, M.P., whose chaplain he had previously been. was the most famous City church during the Commonwealth and Protectorate. Three of its members became sheriffs of London, and two of them filled the important post of lord mayor. church stood on the north side of Pancras Lane, and the chief entrance was from Soper Lane, now Queen Street, Cheapside. It had, says Stow, "divers rich parishioners belonging to it, and many of them liberal benefactors." The church was destroyed in the fire of London, and never rebuilt, but a portion of the churchyard still remains, adjacent to the warehouses of Mr. Deputy Tegg, the publisher. When Cockayn was ejected from Soper Lane, his congregation went with him to a building in Hare Court, called the "Stated Room," and afterwards (in 1772) to a more commodious house in the neighbourhood of Redcross Street. Among them were many wealthy persons-not the least distinguished of whom was the "zealous and enlightened law reformer," Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, Lord Commissioner of the Great Scal, whom Lord Campbell characterizes as "one of the most interesting, as well as amiable characters of the age in which he lived." The congregation which went out with Cockayn remained faithful to him, and formed themselves into an Independent Church, owning no allegiance to the Establishment. Until 1857 they met and worshipped in the same building; but in that year it was thought well to remove from the City; it being found that the increasing habit of merchants and others of living away from their places of business, had, with the substitution of warehouses for private buildings, materially affected the welfare of the church. The resolve, once made, was soon put into execution, and the congregation migrated to the picturesque neighbour-hood of Canonbury. So successful was this change, that four branch congregations in different districts of London have sprung from, and are mostly supported by, the mother Church. In this volume we have the history of Harecourt told at length, with an Introduction by, and a photographic portrait of, its present pastor; with likenesses of Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, Rev. George Cockayn, and the Rev. John Nesbitt, his successor at Harecourt; together with a woodcut representation of the communion-service plate belonging to the church. A large portion of the plate was presented by Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, and there is also one cup which bears the arms of Sir Robert Tichborne, who sat upon the trial of or Robert Memorine, who sat upon the trial of Charles the First, signed his death-warrant, and erwards died in the Tower. The cup was, in probability, says Mr. Marsh, "the parting it to Cockayn, when Tichborne was about to the his house, and surrender himself for trial.

Generation after generation has passed. Generation after generation has passed way, from the Church below to the Church ove, since these sacred vessels first stood upon od's altar, in the house of the founder of Hare-court. We know hands have handled those plates that grasped swords in battles fought for the civil and religious liberty of England; and lips have kissed the cups that moved in prayer at the deaths of Cromwell, Milton, and Bunyan. It is probable that they form the oldest service of plate in the possession of any dissenting church in London, if not in the kingdom. They furnish also the most satisfactory evidence of the connection which existed between the donors and the Church." Very full and satisfactory are the accounts of Cockayn and his contemporaries, and numerous are the references to Cromwell and Seaton; to Whitelocke and Lord Mayor Tichborne; to Hardwick and Andrews, the first deacons of the Church; to John Milton and John Nesbitt; to the brutal Jestreys and the pious Bunyan; and not without importance are references to the numerous ministers nearly or remotely connected with Harecourt, and the several incidents relating to English Nonconformity. In an appendix are given an outline of the sermon preached by Cockayn before the House of Commons on November 29, 1648, at St. Margaret's, Westminster; extracts from his funeral sermon on Colonel Underwood, alderman of the city of London; an elegy on the death of Cockayn, "printed and sold by Richard Baldwin, near the Oxford Arms Inn, Warwick Lane," in 1691; and a "conjectural pedigree" of the founder of Harecourt—prepared by E. Adams, of The College of Arms—tracing his descent from "Sir John Cockayne, of Ashbourne, county Derby, one of the Knights of the shire for that county, temp. Ed. iij." Altogether a painstaking and interesting volume.

Sermons, Preached in St. James's Chapel, York Street, London. By the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A. Fifth edition. (Henry S. King and Co.) When a volume of sermons reaches a fifth edition within two years, it may be safely argued that there is something in them. Nor need we go very far to seek this something. The very first very far to seek this something. The very first paragraph arrests our attention. Here it is:— "It would be very interesting if we could have an hour's conversation with an intelligent Pharisee or Sadducee of the time of our Lord, and find out the way in which this revival amongst the poorer Jews appeared to their judgment. There must Jews appeared to their judgment. have been sarcastic Sadducees who had a kind of compassionate admiration mingled with their scorn for the enthusiasm of the fisher-folk, and who, men of the world, and alive to all the movements of humanity, looked at 'the sect of Jesus' with a slight touch of intellectual interest as a curious Words like these psychological phenomenon."

set hearers a-thinking.

Sermons to the Natural Man. By William G. T. Shedd, D.D. (New York: Charles Scribner and Co.)-Dr. Shedd is one of the old-fashioned kind of preachers, one who studies his subject well before composing his sermon, and then spends time and labour upon the composition. Consequently, his sermons are worth hearing and worth reading. He is also old fashioned in his He believes in the statements made in theology. the Bible respecting the fall, the atonement, the depravity of the heart, and the necessity of repentance and faith. And we dare say that he has an old-fashioned kind of congregation who fill his church, and respect their pastor. It is also not unlikely that when the old-fashioned subjects treated of in this volume, "Righteous ness, temperance, and the judgment to come, such a result as that named in the Acts may again have occurred to some of the hearers. In these days of cheap lithograph sermons, it is refreshing to come across such an old-fashioned volume as this.

Modern Scepticism. A Course of Lectures Delivered at the Request of the Christian Evidence (Hodder and Stoughton.) spring of last year, a society consisting of Churchmen and Dissenters, was formed for the purpose of meeting and stemming the tide of scepticism and unbelief which had set in, and which bade fair to undermine the faith of the young and weak. A course of lectures was determined upon, and some of the most eminent divines were requested to deliver them. Accordingly, the first, on "Design in Nature," was delivered by the Archbishop of York; the second, on "Pantheism," by Dr. Rigg, Principal of the Westminster Training College; the third, on "Positivism," by the Rev. W. Jackson; the fourth, "Science and Revelation," by Dr. Payne Smith; the fifth, on "The Nature of the Missender Training College." and Value of the Miraculous Testimony to Scripture," by the Rev. Dr. Stoughton, Independent; the other lecturers being the Bishop of Ely, the Rev. Geo. Rawlinson, the Rev. Chas. Row, the Rev. Stanley Leathes, and the Rev. Canon Cook. The volume has a preface by Lord Harrowby, and a summary by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Ellicott, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

The Written Word. By Samuel G. Green, D.D. (Sunday School Union.)—The state of the world without the Bible, early divine revelations, the book of the law, the word of prophecy, Christ's witness to Old Testament Scripture, the Divine guardianship, Scripture and tradition, how to study the Bible, the harmony of Scripture with itself, the Bible the world's book—these and many cognate topics are discussed by Dr. Green in a series of augumentative chapters, some of which originally appeared in the "Sunday School Union"

Readings in Holy Writ. By Lord Kinloch. (Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.)—Lord Kinloch's object has been "to supply Scripture readings of an evangelical yet personal character." The readings are in reality sermons, headed with texts and ending with prayers. They are of a very miscellaneous character—doctrinal, practical, expository—and display a deep veneration for the written Word, tinged with what is known as unction.

The Path of Holiness.—A First Book of Prayer for the Young. Compiled by a Priest. Edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter. (Rivingtons.)—In printing and in binding this is one of the prettiest and most tastefully got-up books of devotion we have seen for a long time. It is evidently the work of an earnest man, but we think Roman Catholics will scarcely admit that it is quite sound, although it will serve as an admirable preparation for reception into their Communion. The following prayer, which is recommended to young persons, would rather astonish some of the earlier heads of the house of Rivington. It is to be said every morning and evening, after the Lord's Prayer: "May the Blessed Virgin Mary and all the Saints pray for me that I may serve and please God here, and dwell with Him hereofter in Honorn."

here, and dwell with Him hereafter in Heaven."

Of Adoration in Spirit and Truth: written in four books. By John Eusebius Nieremberg, S.J., with a preface by the Rev. Peter Gallwey, S.J. (Burns, Oates, and Co.)—The first translation of this work first appeared in 1673, at a time when the penal laws against Roman Catholics were rampant. Being debarred from the outward profession of their religion, they sought comfort in books of devotion, which they might study in comfort and safety. Many of the books then in use are in use still, and can scarcely be improved; and many of those books contain little that Protestants might not use with advantage. This is one of that kind; indeed, page after page may be read without coming across a passage which Exeter Hall would pronounce as unsound. It is pleasant to see books of this nature reprinted and being put into circulation by the Roman Catholics of the present day.

Familiar Instructions in Mental Prayer. By the Abbé Courbon. (Burns, Oates, and Co.)—Like the preceding, this also made its first appearance in the seventeenth century. A copy no doubt fell into the hands of Mr. Montgomery, for we find the ideas of the opening chapter all embodied in his well-known hymn-

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," and we hope our Protestant readers will not charge us with any desire to pervert them, when we recommend this book to the notice of all devout persons as a book which will afford them much help in their devotional exercises. It is much more scriptural than many manuals published by members of the Anglican Church.

Self-Renunciation. From the French. an Introduction by the Rev. T. T. Carter. 8vo. (Rivingtons.)—Like some other books already noticed, this is from a Roman Catholic source; but Mr. Carter assures us that it contains nothing specially Romanistic, consequently there nothing specially Komanistic, consequently there was no need to omit a single passage, nor to try the "questionable experiment of an adapted edition." The author, the Abbé Guilloré, a Jesuit, was a contemporary of Fénélon, and, like him, was accused of Quietism. His writings are of a very practical character, leading to inward repose only through a most real and searching discipline of the entire life. Perhaps the best way of explaining the nature of the work is by means of a short extract. It is from the chapter "On the Trials of Prayer": — "It is unquestionably a great trial when, in spite of an earnest desire and effort to pray, the soul remains in a barren state, unable to fix upon any holy thought or kindle any good desire. But one frequent cause of this trial is that we too often enter upon our devotional exercises without any due preparation, and so we find nothing but a reflection of our own state—dry emptiness." The author then gives the reasons for this state of spiritual dryness, and remedies for the same. This multiplication of devotional books is a good sign: it shows an amount of life and vigour in striking contrast with the deadness which prevailed but a few years back.

Keps to Christian Knowledge. (Rivingtons.)—
Two more of these very excellent keys have been published—the first, on "Christian Doctrine and Practice founded on the Church Catechism," by the Rev. J. H. Blunt; the other by the Rev. J. P. Norris; "A Key to the Narrative of the Acts of the Apostles," is, in fact, a key to the history of the Apostolic Church. Both can be strongly recommended to the younger members of the English Church, and will be found especially serviceable to school teachers.

British subjects have got on in Buenos Ayres; with a list of the landowners in that city and province, and an argument in favour of entigration, by Stephen Webster.

From Messrs. Bell and Daldy:—The Poetical Works of Sir Thomas Wyatt.—The Poetical Works of John Dryden. Vols. 1 and 2. The latest volumes of the "Aldine Edition of the British Poets," carefully collated with the text of the earlier issues, with explanatory notes and memoirs of the authors. The Dryden will be complete in 5 vols. It is not a mere reprint of Pickering's book, for the text has been patiently and industriously compared with that of previous editors. The Life has been re-written, with new facts added, and old ones authenticated.

From Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin:-Irish Railway Reform. A plan for amalgamating the several railway companies in Great Britain, and showing that uniform fares of 2s., 1s., and 6d., for any distance exceeding ten miles, would be profitable to the State; with a map showing the proposed new central station for the metropolis, so that a passenger could travel from east to west, north or south, or vice versa, with only one change of carriage. By James Harvey Watson, who considers it to be the duty of the Government to purchase all the railways, and so put an end to the monopoly of the companies.

—Shakspeare Copy-Books. No. 1. Arranged by Arranged by Charles Christopher Warburton, from whom we have received a pamphlet containing various "Opinions of the Press," favourable to his notion of selecting pasfavourable to his notion of selecting passages from Shakspeare's plays as fit sentences to be copied by school children and committed to memory. Without presuming to differ from such high critical without presuming to differ from such might critical authorities as Fun, the South London Press, the Greenwich and Deptford Chronicle, and the Thanet Guardian, we may be allowed to question the taste of some of the selections:—"Kings are earth's gods," "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown" (not always, Mr. Warburton), "Words pay no debts," &c. Nor is the writing itself so careful as careful as a little too square it strikes us. In could be wished—a little too square, it strikes us. In the first copy a t is lest uncrossed, and in several pages of large text-hand small words are introduced to get the words into the line.—Model Drawing, in 26 plates, accompanied by directions for the drawing from solid forms and for making objects in cardboard; by Ellis A. Davidson, being a volume of Cassell's Technical Series. - A Complete Manual of Spelling, on the principles of contrast and comparison, with illustrative exercises, by J. D. Morell, D.D., Government Inspector of Schools. An exceedingly useful work, especially for self-teachers.

From Mr. Collins, Philadelphia:—George W. Childs: a Biographical Sketch, by James Parton. A memoir of one of the most remarkable men of the day. A man who, by tact, good judgment, industry economy, and stringent honesty, has raised himself from obscurity to eminence and wealth.

From Messrs. Crossley and Clarke, Harrow:—
Companion to Schiller's Wilhelm Tell; being a complete Vocabulary, with Notes and Historical Incomplete vocabulary, with Notes and Historical Introduction. By Hermann Muller-Strubing; edited by the Rev. R. H. Quick, assistant master, on the modern side, in Harrow School. A real assistant to the German scholar; copies of the "Companion" being bound up with the German text of "William Tell."

From Messrs. Dean and Son :-- The Reference Tell. Perage and Baronetage, and the Reference House of Commons; being Parts 1 and 2 of "Debrett's Titled Men." Very handy, cheap, and useful manuals, for politicians, merchants, and journalists.—An Illustrated List of Children's Books and other Publications.

From Messrs. Charles Griffin and Co.:—Spenser and His Poetry. By George L. Craik, D.D. Vols. 2 and 3, being the concluding volumes of that well-known and valuable series, "Bell's English Poets;" a series that might be made even more acceptable by the addition of the works of other and later poets.

From Messrs. Groombridge and Sons: - A Course of Natural Philosophy; comprising the elements of mechanics, hydrostatics, and optics; adapted for the use of candidates for matriculation at the University of London, schools, and self-teachers. By Richard Wormell, M.A., author of various mathematical and scientific treatises. - An Elementary Course of Theoretical and Applied Mechanics. By the same author.

Second edition, revised.

From Messrs. Hamilton and Adams: -Young John Bull's Letter to His Grandmother, "Mistress Britannia," containing the "only true account of his conduct and opinions;" an outcome, and not the least clever, of the recent political pamphlet-writing rage.

From Mr. John Heywood, Manchester: - Science Lectures for the People; being the first series of science lectures delivered at Carpenter's Hall, Manchester:—I. Elementary Chemistry, by Professor Roscoe; 2. Zoology, by Dr. Thomas Alcock; 3. Coal, by Professor Jevons; and 4. Elementary Physiology, by Dr. John Edward Morgan. - Handbook to the Metric System; an Exposition of the Decimal System of Weights, Measures, and Money. -New Standard Arithmetic, parts 1 and 2, arranged to meet the requirements of the Educational Code of 1871.—Heywood's Manchester Readers, a series of books for elementary schools. From Messrs. John Menzies and Co., Edinburgh:

From Messrs, John Menzles and Co., Landaught — Rural Industry made Profitable, intended for the instruction of farmers wives, and all to whom rural industry is attractive; by Thomas Baldwin, Esq., Superintendent in the Agricultural Department of National Education.

From Messrs. Moxon and Co.:—Sonnets. By Edward Moxon—the friend of Charles Lamb, the friend of Rogers, of Wordsworth, of Tennyson. Moxon, poets publisher, was no mean poet. If we remember aright, his Sonnets were only published for private circulation among a very numerous circle of acquaintances, but they are well worthy of republication, and now appear in a neatly printed, handsome form.

From Messrs. Pardon and Son:—An Appeal to the London School-Board, by A Londoner, in favour of an educational scheme to compel the teaching of religion and morals in all their schools, in addition to the proverbial Three R's.

From Messrs. Parkes and Co. :- Hooray! a copy

From Messrs. Parkes and Co. :—Hooray! a copy of loyal and patriotic songs, apropos of the recent royal visit, by Barney Bradey; to which are added St. Patrick's Ruction, and Sods from the Turf of Puncherstown. A real bit of comedy.

From Mr. William Penny:—The Battle of the Days and the Quarrel of the Churches, two dreams, in verse, of a possibly proper observance of the Sunday, and a probably sincere and not utterly impossible return of Dissenters to the Church. By a Nonconformist. formist.

From Messrs. Smith and Elder: - To their "Cheap Editions of Popular Works" Messrs. Smith and Elder have just added three of Mr. Wilkie Collins most famous fictions—Basil, Armadale, and The Queen of Hearts. Though, next to Mr. Dickens, Mr. Collins is the best read novelist of the day, the publication of his works in their present form will doubtless introduce him to thousands to whom he was before unknown-perhaps even by name.

From Mr. G. J. Stevenson:—John Bull's Dream, a pamphlet after the pattern of "The Row at Dame Europa's School," and "The Battle of Dorking," lacking something of the trenchant wit and biting satire which made them so popular.

From the Sunday School Union:—The Singing Annual for Sunday Schools; a series of Hymns, with words and music, well edited by Philip Phillips,—The Christian Psalmist. a collection of tunes, chosenson. The Christian Psalmist, a collection of tunes, chorales, sanctuses, and chants for public and family worship; edited and arranged by James Turle, E. J. Hopkins, and J. DRAWING COPY BOOKS.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of SHAW'S SERIES of 1d. and 2d. DRAWING COPY BOOKS, will be ready early next month. Nos. 4 to 40 are also in preparation. Most of the advanced copies are drawn by some of the best artists of the day, and with the process of Graphotype Engraving a freedom of style can be got by far superior to any other method. Drawing copies printed from wood have a stiffness about them which is anything but desirable, whilst by making use of Graphotype Engravings we get the Artist's own work, as the lines drawn by him remain to be printed from.

A NEW SERIES OF

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

EDITED BY THOMAS GUTHRIE, D.D.

"O day most calm, most bright
The week were dark but for thy light:
Thy torch doth show the way."—HERBERT.

SEVEN Yearly Issues of The Sunday Magazine are now before the public, and with the October Part a New Series will be begun. Several novel features will be introduced with the view of improving the publication, and rendering it more worthy of a place of honour in the Cottage as well as the Drawing-room.

The price will be Sixpence a month instead of Sevenpence as hitherto, but there will be no diminution in the quantity of literature—the Conductors feeling assured that the increase of sales will be such as to compensate for the loss through the reduction in price. Their experience has shown them that to deserve success is the best way to obtain it.

But however much might be said it would still require to be left to The Sunday Magazine itself, in its altered and amended form, to make friends or to lose them. So without doing more than asking attention to the following list of Contents, the Conductors beg leave to refer the reader to the October and succeeding Parts of the Magazine, confident that they will be their own best recommendation.

CONTENTS OF THE OCTOBER PART.

The beginning of the New (Sixpenny) Series.

- I. THE CHARITIES OF LONDON. By THOMAS GUTHRIE, D.D.
- 2. THE VICAR'S DAUGHTER. Chap. I.—V. By GEORGE MACDONALD, Author of "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," "The Seaboard Parish," &c.
- 3. A DAY WITH CHRIST. By the Rev. SAMUEL Cox.

THE NEW LECTIONARY.

SHORTLY WILL BE PUBLISHED

THE CHURCH SERVICES

Containing the Book of Common Prayer, Mith Proper Lessons for Dundays and other Holy-days, and the Bew Cestament, Arranged in the Order in which they are Read.

By J. WHITAKER.

In this volume the various Services appointed to be read on Sundays and other Holy-days throughout the year have, for the first time, been brought together in their natural order. Immediately following the Prayers and Thanksgivings will be found all the special portions for the day. The Proper Psalms, where such have been appointed, are followed by the First Morning Lesson, and this by the special New Testament Lesson whenever any is ordered; then the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, concluding with the Evening Lessons for the day. The Communion and other Offices, with the Psalter, follow in the ordinary manner. The New Testament is divided into sections or paragraphs, and the dates appended when the various chapters or portions are to be read as Second Lessons. The only liberty taken with the text has been to substitute Capital Letters for the small ones hitherto used in those Pronouns or other words which directly refer to the several Persons of the Blessed Trinity. The importance of this change, trifling as it may seem, will be at once apparent to the reader.

The arrangement adopted is so simple, being in fact the natural arrangement, that it will at once commend itself to all Church-goers; it offends the prejudices of none, and in using it there is nothing to unlearn.

The Price will be but a trifle beyond that of the ordinary Church Services.

Just Published, royal 32mo, price 2d.

'HE INDIAN MUSALMANS: Are the Queen? By W. W. HUNTER, LL.D., of Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service, Author of "The Annals of Rural Bengal."

"Very few, we think, who read the narrative, with its episodes of adventure, close it without a conviction that our dominion hangs, even now, to-day, by a hair; that at any moment, in any year, a Musalman Cromwell may take the field, and the empire be temporarily overwhelmed in universal massacre."—Spectator.

"The tale that is recounted in this volume is indeed so strange an historical romance, that we are much mistaken if it finds easy credence."—Atheneum.

TRUBNER and Co., 8 and 60, Paternoster Row.

The ART of SKETCHING from NATURE.

By PHILIP H. DELAMOTTE, Professor of Drawing at King's College, London. Illustrated with Twenty-four Woodcuts and Twenty-five Chromo-Lithographs. Imperial 4to, price £3 3s.

This Volume is put forward as a Complete Practical Guide and Assistant to all who desire to study the art of Sketching from Nature in Water-colours. The course of instruction is illustrated by Progressive Illustrations in Chromo-Lithography, as well as by a number of finely executed Woodcuts. The Coloured Examples are reproductions of Water-colour Drawings by PROUT, E. W. COOKE, R.A., GIRTIN, VARLEY, DEWINT, BIRKET FOSTER, G. THOMAS, and the Author, and, it is hoped, will give the book a permanent value to all lovers of English art.

CHILDREN. Containing Twenty-four Popular Songs, &c. By ALFRED SCOTT GATTY, Composer of "O! Fair Dove, O! Fond Dove." Fcap. 4to, 4s. 6d.

"Simple, playful, child-like music."—Lady's Own Paper.

"Some of them very pretty, and all suitable for small singers." - Examiner.

OUTLINES OF INDIAN HISTORY.

Comprising the Hindu, Mahomedan, and Christian Periods (down to the Resignation of Sir J. Lawrence). With Maps, Statistical Appendices, and numerous Examination Questions. Adapted specially for Schools and Students. By A. W. HUGHES, Bom. Uncov. Civil Service, and Gray's Inn. Small post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"To the increasing number of students of Indian History this manual will prove very useful, so clear and methodical i; its arrangement."-Educational Times.

"The style of the narrative is concise and yet full, and as a text book it will be of immense advantage to pupil and teacher alike, in shortening their labours and in making a dull subject full of interest and spirit."-School Board Chronicle.

BOOK - KEEPING. A New Manual.

PHILIP CRELLIN, Accountant, adapted both for Merchants and Retail Traders. It explains the Theory and Practice of Single and Double Entry, and gives a New System, which combines the advantages of both. A set of Accounts is appended in illustration of the System. NOTICE.

Early in October will be published,

In Two Volumes, 8vo, 2,000 pages, bound in cloth, with a Steel Plate, a Map, and nearly 200 Woodcuts,

THE SIXTH EDITION

OF THE

Science and Practice of Medicine.

By WILLIAM AITKEN, M.D. Edin.,

Professor of Pathology in the Army Medical School;
Corresponding Member of the Royal Imperial Society of Physicians of Vienna, of the Society of Medicine and Natural History of Dresden, and of the Imperial Society of Medicine of Constantinople, &c., &c.

THIS "Representative Book of the Medical Science and Practice of the day" (Lancet) has been out of print nearly twelve months, in consequence of the great care exercised, and the time occupied, by the Author in the preparation of the forthcoming edition.

The Additions are too numerous and extensive to be specified in detail, but it may be sufficient to state they are equivalent to a third volume added to previous editions. Yet the size of the work is not increased, as a special fount of type was cast to enable the printer to preserve clearness without adding to the bulk of the volumes.

Among the additions, however, may be mentioned the adoption of the order of Classification as well as the new Nomenclature of the College of Physicians.

Every part has been thoroughly Revised, especially the details of temperature in each disease, for which new Diagrams have been cut, after a better method.

In fact, no pains have been spared to still further enhance the character and value of this great work, which, on the appearance of the last edition, was styled by the Medical Times, and may be considered, "the ordinary Text-Book in most of our Schools."

Faust: A Tragedy. By Johann WOLFGANG VON GOETHE. Translated in the Original Metres by BAYARD TAYLOR. 2 vols., post 8vo, 24s.

"This translation, begun twenty years ago, has evidently been a labour of love. Mr. Taylor has by no means sought to evade any difficulties. He has neither stooped to prose nor used arbitrary forms of verse, but has endeavoured to preserve at once both the meaning and the metres of the original. None can doubt that this is the true artistic form of translation for poetry. . . . No scanty specimens culled here and there could give a fair impression of the translator's merits. Careful and conscientious work is seen everywhere, and the errors of former translations have been well corrected."-Athenaum.

Benoni Blake, M.D. Author of "Peasant Life in the North." 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"Whether the reader likes fresh country life, subtle analysis of character, good-natured raillery, and caustic little bits of downright fun, any or all of them he will find in 'Benoni Blake, M.D.' "-Spectator.

Shoemakers' ablaillage. HENRY HOLBEACH. 2 vols., post 8vo, 16s.

"A really clever book."-Saturday Review.

"We must content ourselves with calling attention to this very simple, yet delightful tale, overflowing with humour which is entirely its own."- Westmin-

"There are many scenes and bits of description in these volumes which are worthy of Robert Browning or Mrs. Oliphant, while the separate characterisations of the 'Shoemakers' Village' reveal real power."-British Quarterly Review.

Now on View at the West Gallery, No. 5, Moving Machinery, International Exhibition, UPPER KENSINGTON GORE, LONDON.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Machine now in the Exhibition will set Caps, Small Caps, Italic, and Figures, just the same as lower case.

LEADING FEATURES.

The use of Steam Power only in composing, the Composer being automatical. The securing of subsequent editions, and from various sizes of type, as the paper may be perforated in duplicate, lent, sold, or used again and again, and in future years. The machines will set any sizes of type, and the same perforations will set as many sizes as may be desired—a Shilling Bible and a Family Bible for instance. This machines will set as many sizes as may be desired—a Shilling Bible and a second size of type, and the same perforations will set as many sizes as may be desired—a Shilling Bible and a second size of the same perforations. Family Bible, for instance. [This may be done simultaneously by the machine named below, each size coming out at the rate of 40,000 an hour.] The brainwork of the machine is thus made permanent.

Small type is set with the come and it.

Small type is set with the same rapidity as large—viz., 12,000 an hour. [This may be increased to 40,000.]

Girls may perforate at home for offices any distance away. Authors may send perforated slips, instead of "early sheets" abroad.

Justification is very easy, as proofs are pulled from the long lines, and corrections then made, the workman always seeing his matter many lines in advance.

AN ENLARGED MACHINE, now in course of making, will set alternately or simultaneously Five kinds of Type, including Two-line letters. Thus, Advertisement First-lines, Footnotes, and Quotations may be set without a momenta data. tions may be set without a moment's delay.

Speed Guaranteed at 40,000 an hour for Each size of Type, or 200,000 an hour if all five are being set at once. Columns of News, or Books, may be thus set simultaneously in five sizes, no extra mechanism required, no extra travel of the Perforated Paper, more than in the Exhibition machine.

TRADE AND LITERARY GOSSIP.

GAINSBOROUGH .- The business carried on by the executors of the late Mr. John E. Copley, under the name of Amcoats and Co., was, in January last, transferred to Mr. Thos. Amcoats, whose father established the business nearly fifty years ago.

Mr. Holmes informs us that he has recently sold

Mr. Holmes informs us that he has recently sold

No. Holmes informs us that he has recently sold Mr. Burkinyoung's business, 233, Maida Kilburn, to Mr. Charles Livermore, late of 41, Bedford Street, Strand.—Also Mr. Frith's business, 221, Upper Ebury Street, to Mr. Adams, late of 14, Chandos Street, Strand.—Mr. Everett's business, 358, Clapham Road, to Mr. Baines, of Wandsworth Road.—Mr. Smeeton's business, Jonson's Place, Harrow Road, to Mr. Spicer, late of Exeter.

NEW YORK .- The partnership subsisting between Messrs. Pott and Amery has been dissolved by the retirement of Mr. Amery and the introduction of Mr. Edwin and Mr. James B. Young. The firm now trade as Pott, Young, and Co.

LUTTERWORTH. - The business of Mr. Edward Voss has been purchased by Mr. Bottrill, who has amalgamated it with his own.

TURIN.—Messrs. J. Gay and Sons, having migrated from Paris, have established themselves here, and have just published a tasteful little catalogue, containing a number of books highly prized by elderly gentlemen possessing long purses. They also announce a Bibliotheque Libre, which will contain all the early "productions érotiques."

prospectus is a specimen worth preserving.

THE LADY SCOTT SWINDLE.—James
Arthur man, alias Viscount de Montgomery, and Arthur Stenson, who, in conjunction, assumed the Stenson, who, in conjunction, assumed the name of Hamilton & Co., were brought to trial at the Clerkenwell Sessions, and convicted, but not sentenced, a point of law having been raised by their counsel. In bringing the prisoners to but the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the prisoners to be the counsel of the prisoners to be the pris justice, a large sum was necessarily expended in law, and a subscription is being raised to reimburse the prosecutors.

The next number of THE BOOKSELLER will contain our Annual Notice of Books promised, or likely to appear, during the Forthcoming Season. For the purpose of making this as complete as possible, we shall be obliged by advertisers sending their lists not later than October 20.

A WORD TO THE TRADE - Last year we were informed by a publisher that he had frequent applications respecting the price of a very important volume which he had advertised several times in our pages, and the price of which we had ourselves given in three places, and had also devoted more than a page to the notice of it; to mend matters, a large, and one of the most wealthy of our provincial booksellers, wrote a letter of complaint to ourselves, to the effect that having ordered the book through his agent instead of direct from the publisher, he had lost 3s. 6d. There is no remedy for carelessness or stupidity, and if our readers will not master the details of their business, they have only themselves to blame, and must suffer accordingly. Those who wish to know their business must learn it for themselves, and the way to do so is to watch the announcements made from time to time by publishers, and having noticed these, to mention the books to those likely to become purchasers; they thus know what to order, and how many copies they are likely to sell. This month's BOOKSELLER may be regarded as the first of the season, and should be carefully gone through. Next month we shall give a complete list of our own, culled from all sources; at the same time all the publishers will present their own lists in detail. We must give up all regrets for the past days of protection prices, and resolutely set to work to meet the new state of things. Henceforth the pages of the BOOKSELLER will not be open to complaints of underselling; for however much we may deplore it, free trade is the order of the day, and the wisest men are those who, in these difficult times, can by their superior knowledge secure competence or wealth.

EDINBURGH.—Mr. William Erskinc, who for thirteen years had had the management of the printing department of the business of Messrs. William Collins, Sons, and Co., Heriot Hill Works, Glasgow, has joined the firm of Messrs. Schenck and Macfarlane, lithographic and letterpress printers, St. James's Square, Edinburgh. Previous to leaving Glasgow Mr. Erskine was invited to a dinner presided over by Mr. Collins, when one of the partners, Mr. Henderson, in the name of some friends, presented to him a gold watch and massive chain as a mark of their esterns Hoppe's German Catalogue.—Through Messrs. Nutt we have received a copy of this work, which we recommend to the notice of all young bibliographers as an example of careful industry. Mr. Hermann Hoppe is a German bookseller established at St. Petersburg, and for the benefit of others, but more especially of his own business, has collected and published, under their different classes, all the works of merit published in Germany from 1801 to 1868—not simply short titles, as at the end of each month's BOOKSELLER, or in the London Catalogue, but in most cases the full title, same as given in our own full lists, with the prices and the publishers' names. The volume extends to 1,069 pages, and contains particulars of more than fifty thousand contains particulars of more than fifty thousand different works. The full title is Katalog der wichtigeren, hervorragenden und besseren Schriften Deutscher Literatur welsche in den Jahren 1801 bis end 1868 erscheinen sind.

PIRATES. — According to a correspondence which has lately appeared in the Times, it appears that in the United States of America there are some publishers who, finding nothing illegal in so doing, reprint the works of English authors, including a forgotten novelof Mr. Mortimer Collins They are, therefore, gibbeted as Pirates. In this country the works of Cooper, Washington Irving, Longfellow, Bryant, Mrs. Stowe, Noah Webster, and every other author whose writings are worth it, are reprinted without their consent or knowledge, or that of their representatives; but here, all who do such things are honourable, respectable men. There can be no piracy in taking that which the law of England permits.

FOREIGN DEGREES,—The Church Times no longer inserts the obnoxious advertisements referred to in our last, but the Athenaum will not forego so lucrative a source of income. A medical correspondent writes: "Permit me to point out that the Medical Zimes and Circular Dersists in inserting an advertisement similar to those objected to, except that it is addressed to the medical profession." We were under the impression that our medical contemporary had set its face against quackery of all descriptions.

SHAM DEGREES.—The Colonial Church Chronicle for October exposes the traffic in spurious degrees, by which some clergymen have been victuring the property of Brown, it appears, has been inducing people to pay for M. A. and LL. D. degrees, a university which never existed except upon the diploma. As o-called "University" in Philadelphia, degrees were manufactured at a cost of 25 dollars, and some cute person in Tennessee, constituting himself an "University," granted any number of degrees for a confederate in London.

THE CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE SOCIETY. This venerable society is reverting to its original purpose, viz., the dissemination of knowledge, and finds that in doing so its powers are increased, and that it is in every way becoming more healthy and useful. During the present year it has devoted £3000 to the religious inspec-tion of schools; it has made grants of books to the value of £10,000, and has made large grants for other purposes; but our immediate reason for noticing its work is that in its literary aspect the society evidences signs of healthy improvement. It no longer goes out of its way to produce such books as Miss Pratt's "Flowering Plants," but is confining itself to the production of books and is comming itself to the production of books and tracts such as clergymen may distribute and recommend. A new hymnal is in progress, a paragraph Bible, the second volume of Mr. W. W. How's "Commentary," some popular sermons, and a great number of smaller works. It has recently published some useful books against ind and a great number of smaller works. It has recently published some useful books against infi-delity, including Dr. Hessey's "Boyle Lectures," Professor Rawlinson's "Historical Illustrations of the Old Testament," and Mr. Warrington's work on Miracles. Books to the amount of £82,315 on miracies. Dooks to the amount of £02,315 have been sold, which, after paying all expenses, yielded a net profit of £2081. The secretary expresses a desire to receive offers of good books suited to the wants of the society.

A FEMALE INSTITUTION WANTED.—A cor-

A FEMALE INSTITUTION WANTED.—A correspondent, describing herself as assistant to a bookseller and stationer, writes to enquire whether there is any society in connection with the trade to which, by paying an annual subscription, she might be enabled to provide against old age, sickness, or distress? We are not acquainted with any such institution, but, considering the large number of female assistants, think that there ought to be. Perhaps even now it may not be

REPORTS OF BOOKS.—In reporting the price of books, subscribers will find it a great convenience if the price of postage be also added; many of the advertisers have no direct communication with London. Another matter to which we desire to draw attention is the untruthful nature of the reports frequently sent. The condition of the book should be fairly stated. It will frequently happen that soiled copies, or those having torn leaves, will answer the purpose, but more frequently they will not. DIARIES AND POCKET-BOOKS. - Even without the recent cold, showery weather, the receipt of these annuals seems to remind us that the year is drawing to a close. Letts's, as usual, are first in the field with editions for colonial sale or for use at This year we have a long folio which may be used as a day-book, Dr. on one side and Cr. on the other.—Unwins' Indicator, with its neverfailing supply of wise saws and moral reflections,— Meade's Pocket-Books, neat and cheap, four kinds to suit as many different tastes. Several smaller diaries and some sheet almanacks have also come to hand.

THACKERAY'S WORKS .- The first volume of the cheap collected edition, containing the whole of "Vanity Fair," has made its appearance. It is a handsome volume of nearly seven hundred pages, printed in good clear type, and but for the existence of its larger illustrated predecessor, would be styled the "Library Edition." "Vanity Fair" is a work of true genius; like good wine it improves by keeping, for when we read it again, after an interval of several years, we find points of humour about Becky Sharp, and the other characters, which had previously escaped our observation.

COOL. -Some anonymous publisher, dating from 342. Strand, is going to put the world under an obligation, by completing the work which the sudden death of Mr. Charles Dickens left unfinished, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." cannot afford space for the whole of the exordium with which the obliging continuator introduces his work, but the following extracts will convey some notion of the loving spirit in which he volunteers to unravel "John Jasper's Secret:"

When the lamented death occurred, a special pang was added to the general sorrow felt for his loss, in the know-ledge that he left unfinished a work which had commanded added to the general sorrow test for his tools, in the knowledge that he left unfinished a work which had commanded the widest attention for its opening numbers, and which promised to be one of his most effective and popular books.

Very soon thereafter the enquiry came to be made whether the work would not be completed, from materials understood to be in existence, by some capable hand; but that question was almost as quickly answered, by the statement that no such continuation could be made, because there existed no remaining materials whatever.
The truth, meanwhile, as usual, lay between the two suggestions. "Materials" there were few.
All these, with many more particulars, laboriously but lovingly procured, have fallen into the hands of the writers of this concluding story, who trust that they are conveying a benefit as well as a pleasure to the world in setting partially at rest the multitudinous speculations to which the non-explanation of the Mystragy has given rise. They have written in the fullest love and admiration of the unfinished original work, as well as the great novelist who,
to the grief of all civilized lands, so suddenly laid down his wonderful pen; they have carried out, however feebly, to the grief of all civilized lands, so suddenly laid down his wonderful pen; they have carried out, however feebly, what they have fully traced and identified as the intention of the writer, every intrinsic and extrinsic fact and hint being carefully considered. Thus they make no apology, because they feel themselves to have been really offering homage to a great name in faithfully gathering up materials, and completing, it may be unskilfully, what its projector left merely a brilliant fragment. That they have failed to sustain the delicate shades of character of the actors in the original story, only to be imparted by the OSE, or to deck original story, only to be imparted by the one, or to deck the conversation of those characters with that irresistible oddity of blended wit and pathos for which that one was unequalled in the age or the language—these defects no-body can know more profoundly than the writers themselves. "As the work will be uniform in every respect," of course all the subscribers to "Edwin Drood" will be delighted to have this opportunity of completing the unfinished work!

LIFE OF MR. DICKENS.-Messrs. Chapman and Hall desire us to state that there was no warrant for the assertion of a contemporary, that Mr. Forster was about to issue a life of Mr. Charles Dickens.

LIVES OF THE SAINTS.—Mr. Hodges, of Frome, announces a new "Lives of the Saints," by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, in twelve crown 8vo volumes, to be published quarterly, and issued to subscribers paying one guinea in advance.

THE PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY has issued its report for 1871, and, notwithstanding the nar-rowmindedness of its conductors, is doing some excellent work in the promulgation of healthy literature. If booksellers did their work properly, there should be but little room for such a society; it, however, is not antagonistic to their interests, for we feel certain that wherever this society's agents find their way, there bookselling will increase. There is one thing which we would urge upon the trade, viz., that they incur a very grave moral responsibility in circulating such publications as the Day's Doings and Day and Night. Let them boldly refuse to sell or supply them, and we are certain that, eventually, they will not be losers by keeping such filthy publications out of their shops.

CUT versus UNCUT BOOKS. To the Editor of "THE BOOKSELLER."

SIR,—Perhaps the following may have some weight in the decision of the above subject. In June last I ordered through my agents a copy of Pressense's "Martyrs and Apologists." In due course I received and supplied it to my customer, who is the secretary to a clerical book-club. cut it and put it into circulation, and in a few days had it returned as imperfect. He, of course, sent it to me, and requested a perfect copy to be sent in its place. I, to save time, ordered another copy and supplied it. The first opportunity I returned the imperfect copy to my agents, asking them to credit it. After a short time, to my surprise, I have the book returned to me, perfected.
"The publishers refuse to credit it, because it has been cut up." Are we or our customers supposed to look through every book we buy before we sell or cut

If publishers supply imperfect books, why should the purchaser have to wait whilst it is being perfected?

Supposing my customer had been a "bird of passage," instead of a resident, and had discovered the incompleteness of the book only as he was going away, and there had not been time to get another copy, why should the fault of the binder or publisher fall on my shoulders? I may or may not want another copy of the book—the principle remains the same; but if the book had been cut in the hinding. been cut in the binding, the publishers would not have had that excuse for selling two copies instead of one of the book. I do not for one moment think all publishers would act in such a way; if they did, the question would be solved in a very short time. Apart from this view of the a very short time. Apart from this view of the matter, I think it would be a great boon to the matter, I think it would be a great boon to the trade and the public alike if all books were cut in the binding. I have heard customers say, "What a treat to cut a book;" but the many say, "Wa a trouble," and rejoice over one cut for them.

I remain, sir, Yours obediently, A COUNTRY BOOKSELLER.

OBITUARY.

Sept. 5.—Aged 70, Mr. William Strange, Publisher, formerly of Paternoster Row. Mr. Strange was one of the early pioneers of literature in the then unpalatable form of periodicals, especially those of a political kind, publishing, amongst other things, Eigaro in London, one of the predecessors of Punch. He at one time acquired some notoriety by having an injunction issued to prevent his publishing a descriptive catalogue of the Royal Victoria and Albert Gallery of Elchings; an injunction which all right-minded persons rejoiced to see, but which lawyers of the present day believe to have been due rather to the illustrious plaintiffs than to the soundness of the judge's law. Bankruptcy was the natural consequence of an adverse decision. For some time past Mr. Strange has been deriving benefit from his early providence in becoming a member of the Bookeellers' Provident Institution.

of the Booksellers' Provident Institution.
Sept. 10.—At Ramsgate, aged 77, Richard
Bentley, Esq., Publisher, of New Burlington
Street. The deceased, who was descended from an old Shropshire family, was born in London, it is thought in Paternoster Row, where his father, in conjunction with Mr. John Nichols, published the General Evening Post, of which he was part proprietor. At an early age young Bentley was sent to St. Paul's School, where, amongst others, he had for schoolfellows a brother of the late Chief Baron Pollock, Barham (Ingoldsby), and After leaving school he other eminent men. Mr. John Nichols, in Red Lion Court, and in 1821 joined his brother Samuel, who had established a printing-office in Shoe Lane. Here, before the Clays or other modern printers had sprung into eminence, most of the best printing in London was done; the Bulmers and some others had a great and well-deserved reputation for ordinary letter-press printing, but the Bentleys were, we believe, the first to pay artistic attention to wood-cuts: all the earliest and best printed editions of "Yarrell's Natural History" attest the care bestowed in their production by the Shoe Lane firm.

In 1829 Mr. Richard Bentley joined Mr. Colburn, a successful publisher of novels, who had also been the fortunate publisher of Evelyn's and Pepys' Diaries. The partnership lasted but two or three years, and Mr. Bentley alone carried on the business; but after some time Mr. Colburn recommenced business at Windsor, till Mr. Bentley permitted him to return to London. In 1837, in conjunction with Mr. Dickens, he commenced the publication of "Bentley's Miscellany," which for many years had a most successful career. In that first appeared "Oliver Twist," illustrated by George Cruikshank. He also commenced a series of "Standard Novels," of which a hundred volumes were published; the success of these was such that with the assistance of the Hon. George Smythe, afterwards Lord Strangford, he attempted to establish a newspaper, but the "Young England" party was not strong enough to support it. He afterwards started Bentley's Quarterly Review, of which but four numbers appeared; in this he was assisted by Mr. Douglas Cooke and the pre-sent Marquis of Salisbury. Mr. Bentley was a man of fine taste, and all his publications exhibited marks of his handiwork. His integrity was unimpeachable, but it was not his fortune to accumulate riches. His judgment was at times warped by his predilections, and he frequently over-estimated the value of works offered him. In 1857, a judgment of the House of Lords reversing the supposed rights of American authors, deprived him of copyrights valued at about £16,000, and some of his speculations turned out very unfavour-In 1867 he met with a very severe accident at the Chepstow Railway Station, and since then his son George, with whom he had been for some time in partnership, and who succeeds him, had had the management of the business.

Sept. 14.—Āt Leicester, aged 22, Mr. William Penn Cox, proprietor of the Leicester Advertiser, in which he had succeeded his father but nine months.

Sept. 15.—Aged 66, Mr. Thomas Tegg, son of the late eminent publisher, Mr. T. Tegg.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

English Lessons for English People. By the Rev. Edwin A. Abbott, M.A., and J. R. Seeley, M.A. (Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday.)—There are few Englishmen who write their language with exact correctness. Not only the hodmen of literature, but men whose works have gained the name of classics, will furnish us with examples of ill-constructed sentences, or of solecisms, or even of false grammar. Our language is not studied as a science. For a man to write in English it is thought no further qualification is necessary than a superficial and colloquial acquaintance with its forms; and yet, for perfection in English style, a study is required equal to that needed for the Greek or Roman classics. Instinct and knowledge are both necessary. The one, it is clear, can be supplied only by nature; the other is to be derived from an extensive course of reading and some such book of reference as that before us. Messrs. Abbott and Seeley, we may at once say, have produced the best work extant on the subject to which it refers. Without pretending to supply the place of an English Grammar, presupposing, indeed, a knowledge of grammar and of our idiom, the volume addresses itself to those who, having already a familiar knowledge of English, need help to write it with taste and exactness. And it amply fulfils its promise. Aiming at practical utility, it deals only with those difficulties which, in the course of teaching, the authors have found to be most common and most serious. As the preface puts it, "To use the right word in the right place is an accomplishment no less valuable than the knowledge of the truth that the plural of cherub is cherubin, and the feminine of bull is cow." The work is divided into four parts; the three first, "vocabulary," "diction," and "metre," having for object to smooth the reader's way through difficulties of correct composition. The fourth difficulties of correct composition. part is concerned not more with English than part is concerned not more with English means with other languages, but treats of the different styles of composition, the appropriate subject for each, and the arrangement of the subject matter. Each division is most ably treated. That part devoted to diction is especially noteworthy. Adequate distinction is made—now, we think, for the first time—between the diction of prose and that of poetry, and faults are pointed out in ordinary writings which have only to be seen to be approved. The chapter on metre, too, is full of new and valuable suggestions-metre in general, dissyllable metre, and trisyllable metre being the three divisions. Perhaps, however, the part of the volume which will be of most essential use is the Appendix, which contains valuable hints on some common errors in reasoning, a table of consonants, and questions and references to exercises.

out entering into the details of formal logic, the authors give hints which will be of use to the writers above the capacity of those to whom their book is addressed. This part is full without being overladen with details, and may be studied by advantage even by Ministers of State. Altogether we know no such useful handbook as this; and, now that education higher than a knowledge of the three R's is required, we can safely recommend the work before us as by far the most valuable in our language. The History of Napoleon the First. By P. Lanfrey. Vol. I. (Macmillan.)-M. Lanfrey is near the truth when he states, as a reason for the appearance of his work, that Napoleon has for the most part had no judgment passed upon him but that either of profound hatred or of profound attachment. The great captain was one of those few men that appear in the world, whose function it is to inspire deep feelings of attachment or animosity; and all that has been written about him bears the impress of one or other of these passions. By some authors he is described as a sort of selfish, bloodthirsty ogre, who had no other aim than that of personal and family aggrandisement, and whose administrative, and even military merits, have been highly overrated. On the other hand, the admirers of the man proclaim him to have been equally great in both directions, and to have had a sincere love for France in all his acts, whether as Consul or Emperor. M. Lanfrey writes with unusual impartiality, especially for a Frenchman, on such a theme, and his work supplies us with the most trustworthy estimate of Napoleon, as well as with the most trustworthy materials for each reader himself, desirous of forming an impartial estimate of the character. The volume, which is ably translated, under the sanction of the author, concerns itself with that portion of the life of Bonaparte which is by far the most interesting to a student of human life. The soldier may, perhaps, find more excitement in the record of the battles fought under Napoleon the Emperor; but lovers of biography will all be more absorbed in the early years of Bonaparte—those years of struggle, application, ambition, conspiracy, hopes and The battles of Ulm and Marengo are the last events recorded in the present instalment of the work, and we take leave of the First Consul as he is returning to France with a will more absolute than ever, a soul more impatient and disordered by power than ever, affecting to reject as beneath him all the adulations which men were ready to pay. He pretended to have too high an opinion of himself to attach any value to such gewgaws as supreme power in France would bring him. The insincerity, however, of his distaste for the old array of triumphal demonstration was afterwards clearly manifested. As M. Lanfrey says in his concluding paragraph, the First Consul came back with his mind full of projects which he had not hitherto dared to develope, and he had now in his hand the force necessary for their realization. The battle of Marengo, in fact, gave to the conqueror an unrivalled preponderance in Europe, and an overwhelming power in France. How this power was used, its operations and its results, will be described in future volumes; meanwhile, we may infer the opinion of the biographer from these words:--"He (Napoleon) was about to make use of this to advance one step further in his favourite system, the only system ever fairly comprehended by so prodigious and yet so narrow genius—despotism at home and conquest abroad. Never did fairer seeming cloak direr designs." We must say the present portion has deeply whetted our appetite for the appearance of the remaining volumes. The period over which it extends is full

The siege of Toulon, of romantic vicissitudes. where the young lieutenant first drew attention to himself, the defeat of Wurmser, in 1796, the creation of the Cisalpine Republic, Rivoli and Tolentilo, the occupation of Venice, Campo Formio, the expedition to Egypt, and the campaign in Syria, are the preliminary subjects. Then comes the momentous 18th Brumaire, which is here described with more exactitude, and with greater regard to the probabilities of the occasion, than by any other author we know. Never before have we had so clearly placed before us the various steps in the conspiracy which resulted in the placing of Bonaparte in the leading position in France. The meeting of the conspirators, with their several hopes and aims, the scene in the Council of Ancients, and, again, in that of the Council of Five Hundred, the hesitation and mistakes made at the critical moment by the chief actor in the plot, the promptitude and presence of mind exhibited by Lucien Bonaparte, and the final triumph of the faction, are all described with great spirit and a tone of truth which brings conviction to the mind of a reader. How, during these extraordinary events, Paris displayed only a slight amount of curiosity, and remained neutral; and how public opinion was silent, whilst the army applauded and had its way, are facts ably explained by the author. To us, at this distance of time, and in presence of political surprises effected in more recent times, the events of the 18th Brumaire do not seem unusual for a revolution running its course. But during the first French Revolution such vigilance was exhibited by the several sections of politicians, that a coup d'état seemed impossible; and, after it was effected, seemed wonderful. M. Lanfrey writes with vigour and discretion; and although we do not suppose the verdict he has given will be altogether that of a remote posterity, it is, we venture to predict, as correct as any that during our day could be returned either by a Frenchman or a disinterested foreign writer. There ought to be an index to each volume as it is issued.

By Dr. George The Subterranean World. Hartwig. (Longmans.) This is another contribution by Dr. Hartwig to popular science. Alward in "The Sea and its Living Wonders," "The Tropical World," "The Polar World, and "The Harmonies of Nature," he has exhibited a wild account of the scale of the bited a wide acquaintance with the marvels of physical science, and the ability to make the several subjects he takes in hand full of interest. His pen is a wand which reveals the most fascinating features of nature in all her moods. It must be admitted that the author dwells with more zest upon the wonderful and the unusual than upon the ordinary and the common. But there is little attempt at sensational writing or of selection. Dr. Hartwig writes clearly, and places his facts before the reader with logical exactness. Till we read his volume we did not imagine that the subject could be made so interesting. wonders of the starry heavens and the boundless variety of animal and vegetable life on earth and in water have been amply described. But here, for the first time adequately and in popular form, have we an historian of those dark regions underground, where nature likewise shows us "much that is remarkable or beautiful, or carries on gigantic operations which are sometimes beneficent and sometimes disastrous to mankind." With the aim of describing the wonders of this hidden world in their various relations to man, Dr. Hartwig has explored the whole realm of the subterranean world, and given us the result. Opening his work with a chapter on geological revolutions, he describes the eternal strife between water and fire, the upheaval and depression and succession of the various strata which result, and the uninterrupted succession of organic life to be observed. Fossils, subterranean waters and artesian wells, volcanoes, springs and mud volcanoes, earthquakes, land-slips, and cave rivers form the subjects of the earlier part of the work. Then we come to the subterranean life existing in our planet, and the subterranean relics of pre-historic man are described, with the latest results of anthropologists and antiquaries. After an admirable chapter relating to tunnels-in which that glorious achievement of our day, the Mont Cenis Tunnel, and those lower regions, aptly named "Subterranean London," are prominent topics—the author devotes his sixteen concluding chapters to an account of mines and their various products. All the metals and minerals receive their full share of attention, and some of the most marvellous descriptions in the volume refer to life in mines in various parts of the world. The chapter on "Celebrated Quarries," and that on "Precious

Faris under the Commune; or, The Seventy-three

Second Siege. With numerous Illustration of the Spot, and Leighton, F.S.A. (Bradbury and Evans).—The story of the Paris Insurrection which followed the siege by the Germans, has yet to be told; but, as in looking at a picture, sufficient distance from the canvas must be secured in order to procure a good view; so in describing the events of a revolution, distance of time is absolutely necessary to enable the historian to look impartially upon the events in their order of succession, and prevent him from bringing small matters into the fore-ground and unduly elevating comparatively insignificant incidents into mighty facts. Meanwhile, the reader of to-day may learn much from the perusal of Mr. Leighton's recently-published volume, which contains not only a fairly accurate account of the birth, continuance, and terrible death of the Paris Commune, but many personal items which in a longer history must almost neces-sarily be omitted. The text is illustrated throughout in a style which gives us a vivid idea of the terrible fate that befel the gay city when given up to the tender mercies of the Red Republicans and their excited followers. With a sort of ghastly appropriateness, the title page and many of the illustrations—especially the reproduction of grim Parisian caricatures—are printed in red, the colour that stained the flag and the lives of the Com-munists, and will for ever stain the pages of history in which their doings will be recorded. Mr. Leighton was engaged for some time during both sieges in providing sketches for the Graphic in which newspaper many of the woodcuts and some portion of the text were first published. The whole, gathered together and digested at leisure, now makes an exceedingly readable and interesting volume, which, in the absence of a Macaulay or a Carlyle from the scenes described and depicted, may be taken as the best and most trustworthy account that has yet been given of "Paris under the Commune."

Sketches of the Russian Church. The Divine Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom. By H. C. Romanoff.—"The Divine Liturgy" is that portion of the service used in the Greek Church at the celebration of the Holy Eucharist. It is said to have been compiled by St. John Chrysostom, from the earlier services of St. James and St. Basil. Image worship in a modified form is

Miscellanies by John Addington Symonds, M.D. Selected and edited, with an Introductory Memoir, by his Son. (Macmillan. Bristol: I Arrowsmith). Dr. Symonds was a well known physician of Bristol, where, in addition to a large and influential practice, he enjoyed the friendship and confidence of both rich and poor; among the former of whom were many of refined manners and intellectual culture. As Gulstonian Professor of the Royal College of Physicians, he delivered his famous address upon headache, afterwards published; and in 1863, as president of the British Medical Association, he upheld the practice of medicine as a science and an art, in opposition to the arguments of and the incautious admissions of querulous supporters. This address has been admitted by the Lancet as the most successful "apologia pro vita sua" ever published. But irrespective of his medical writings, Dr. Symonds was the author of many notable essays, scientific lectures, poems and translations, most of which are now re-published in this handsome volume. He died in the spring of the present year at Clifton Hill House, to which he had removed in 1851, having just completed his sixty-third year. He had, says a writer in the British Medical Journal, "long before attained all the honours open to a physician in a great provincial city. In all matters not purely political or muni-cipal, he was looked up and referred to by his fellow-citizens as their natural leader and adviser; and thus held a position among them too seldom occupied by men of his profession, and which he owed to a singular combination of endowmentshigh literary and scientific attainments, cultivation, and elegance in speaking and in writing, intuitive that and knowledge of men, ready hospitality and unostentatious generosity." The life of such a man was well worthy of record, and in this memoir and collection his son has not simply performed a son's duty with loving zeal and tenderness, but given to the world a work which will be prized both by his medical friends and the whole reading public.

Kitly Crump. A Romance of "Love's Young Dream," and other Poems. By Frederick Lang-A Romance of "Love's Young bridge. (J. C. Hotten.)—A poet of fifteen years' standing, being now of the venerable age of twenty-two, Mr. Langbridge publishes his songs and ballads in order that he may learn, from the opinions of competent and impartial critics, what, if he perseveres, are his chances of ultimate success as a writer; for, as he very candidly says, "the criticisms of friends always lean to extremes, and scarcely recognize a half-way house between inspiration and idiocy." THE BOOKSELLER claims to be impartial, if not competent; and after reading his verses with care-and, it may be added, interest—the BOOKSELLER'S opinion is that the young poet may proceed with confidence; and that, though he may never arrive at the eminence of a Tennyson, a Browning, or even of a Swinburne, he may at least take his place on a somewhat more elevated pedestal than is occu-pied by the tribe of versifiers known as "minor poets." For he possesses taste, a good ear for rhythm, and a nice sense of humour, which latter quality is well shown in his delectable ballad of "Kitty Crump:"—

"I think I wasn't quite eighteen, a very gay young spark—
And if I add, a little green, you'll pardon the remark—
When—ah! of penetrable stuff the hearts of youngsters

I fell in love with Kitty Crump, the pretty little barmaid." Of course he is very enthusiastic, and, in view of a speedy marriage with the eligible and delightful young woman, writes to his father, describing his unalterable intentions. Paterfamilias comes to town, and jokes him on his grande passion; but finding he is really serious, goes, like a sensible man, to see what sort of girl is to be introduced into the family, when—to the great relief of the elder, and the disgust of the younger man—it is discovered that Kitty has run off with a more eligible suitor:—

"A sickness stole upon my heart; at length I knew my fate,

And yet I gulped the anguish down and asked her
'Where's Miss Kate?'
She drew a quart of fourpenny, and answered, quite demure,

demure,
'Why she's at Margate, sir, just now,—upon her wedding tour!'"

The "other poems,"—some serious, some pathetic, and not a few really humorous—are worth reading; and were, therefore, worth printing.

Past and Present; or Social and Religious Life in the North. By H. G. Reid. (Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.)—Originally published in the pages of the Westminster Review, the Fortnightly Review, Tait's Magasine, the British Workman, and other less known periodicals, these sketches and stories of Scottish life and manners are now re-issued as a volume, with illustrations—one of which, "Old Oscar," a splendid shepherd's dog, by Harrison Weir, is wonderfully attractive and true to nature. In the first chapter, "the Church and the People," the writer expresses his doubts as to the efficacy of the Westminster Confession, which he thinks talculated by the strictness of its terms to be pernicious rather than otherwise. Such topics as co-operation, emigration, superstition, the old freebooting spirit, and the present condition and dwellings of the Scottish peasantry, are freely and cleverly handled in the other sketches; the arrangement adopted by the writer being favourable to the discussion, under the guise of essay or fiction, of some leading principle, phase of development, or social question of the day.

Cassell's Household Guide, Vol. IV. (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin.) — Adulterations in food, amusements, animals kept for domestic use, baths, bells, cookery receipts, dancing, decorative art, etiquette, embroidery, fancy work, fern culture, gardening, household management, Indiarubber and its uses, jewellery, kitchen arrangements, laundry work, machinery for domestic use, needlework, oils, pomatums, paints and pastry, receipts, sick room cookery, toilette economy, underclothing, vegetables, wages, yachts, and zinc for indoor and outdoor use; these are a few out of the thousand and one subjects described, explained, and more or less illustrated, in this, the fourth and concluding, volume of "Cassell's Household Guide," a work that has commanded—as it deserves to do-a very extensive sale.

Sands and McDowgal's Melbourne Directory, for 1871.—When we first noticed this directory, ten or twelve years ago, it was a modest unpretentious volume. Now it is a fat bulky book of above nine hundred pages. If it go on increasing in the same ratio, the publishers must either reduce the thickness of the paper or enlarge the size of the page. It is a really handsome, well-printed book, giving apparently all needful local information. May we suggest to the publishers, that two or three pages of statistical information might be usefully added, giving some statistics of the income, expenditure, debt, products, agriculture, commerce, and manufactures of Australasia in general, and of Victoria in particular, not forgetting Malbourne.

Victoria in particular—not forgetting Melbourne. FIRST GLASGOW DIRECTORY.—Mr. Forrester has just published a fac-simile reprint of "John Tait's Directory, for 1783-84," containing Glasgow, Greenock, Paisley, and Port Glasgow—a small foolscap volume of 104 pages. If the worthy baillies who figure in this volume could rise from their graves and see the "Melbourne Directory" mentioned above, they would scarcely believe their eyesight; Melbourne, at that time, not having a single white inhabitant.

The Tradition of the Syriac Church of Antioch concerning the Primacy and the Prerogatives of St. Peter and of his Successors, the Roman Pontiffs. By the Most Rev. Cyril Benham Benni, Syriac Archbishop of Mossul (Nineveh). Translated, under the direction of the author, by the Rev. Joseph Gagliardi. (Burns, Oates, & Co.)— The tradition of the Syriac Church of Antioch from the fourth century, as existing in nearly two hundred MSS.—ancient liturgical books, books of the canon law, Fathers of the Syriac Church, historical and theological treatises, and the writings of Patriarchs-in the Library of the Vatican and in the Museum of the College of Propaganda at Rome, were found by the venerable archbishop to contain some testimonies respecting the primacy and prerogatives of St. Peter and of his successors in the Roman See. Some of the evidence so collected may, to Protestants, appear weak and inconclusive; but that there is an amount of evidence which gives colour and weight to the claim is certainly unquestionable. From the fact that at the end of the volume the whole of the passages collected and quoted are printed in Syriac, Oriental scholars will be enabled to judge for themselves as to the integrity of the translation.

Spiritualism and Animal Magnetism. A Treatise on Dreams, Second Sight, Somnambulism, Magnetic Sleep, Spiritual Manifestations, Hallucinations, and Spectral Visions. By Professor G. G. Zerffi, Ph.D., Lecturer on the History of Art at the Government School of Science and Art, South Kensington, &c., &c. (Robert Hardwicke.)-The belief in ghosts, spirits, dreams, and supernatural manifestations is as old as humanity, and, in its later phase, the so-called "spiritualism" occasionally rather ridiculous, if not profane. What the astrologers of ancient times solved from their "inner consciousness" and the impropers of their collections. and the ignorance of their followers, the modern wizards conjure out of chairs and tables, and other gross material mediums, and foist upon the imaginations of the unscientific; nay, even sometimes upon the minds of philosophers, poets, and politi-cians. The late Professor De Morgan expressed his full belief in spiritualism; while Robert Bell, the dramatist, and Charles Dickens, the novelist, were, if not thorough converts, at least so far persuaded that there was "something in it" beyond trick and charlatanism, as to write soberly and seriously about phenomena which wiser men agree unanimously in treating with scorn and derision. And yet—well, when Mr. William Howitt, his wife, daughter, and son-in-law uphold Mr. Home and the Brothers Davenport, what is the world to say? On behalf of the scientific enquirer, Professor Zerffi has a good deal to say and with much that he says few people will feel inclined to quarrel—as when he tells us that electro-biology and animal magnetism are provable facts; that dreams may be short and passing aberrations of the brain, while madness animal magnetism are itself is one long, and sometimes lasting, dream; that magnetic sleep is nothing but a higher degree of our natural sleep, in which the imagination is left free while the body lies inert; and that the phenomena of "spiritualism" are more cr less impostures, which ought to be examined and exposed. The book is prefaced by wo half-length figures, a man and a woman, with dotted red and blue lines, proceeding from heart to heart and brain to brain, to show the course of "summatheric" locations to show the fluid of "sympathetic" electricity, or whatever the fluid may be called.

The Sunday Magazine for 1871.—"What to read on a Sunday?" has been pleasantly answered by the Sunday Magazine, now in the tenth year of its existence. Messrs. Strahan, its publishers, Dr. Guthrie, its editor, and Messrs. Leighton, Green, Mahoney, and other artists who boast the honour and privilege of being its illustrators, are to be congratulated on having, between them, achieved a decided and deserved success in the way of Sunday reading. But most warmly to be way of Sunday reading. Dut most warming to be congratulated are its readers. For in the Sunday Magazine they find just the sort of reading that may be profitably indulged in on rainy afternoons, and long quiet evenings after church. "Fireside and long quiet evenings after church. "Fireside Homilies" by such writers as the late Dean Alford; Essays by Dr. Vaughan; Accounts of Travel in Strange Lands, by Dr. Blaikie, and by the Editor—whose modesty in not obtruding his own pen too frequently is to be commended; and poetry by Sarah Leifchild, Isabella Mayo, George Man Doneld and others—the whole more George Mac Donald, and others;—the whole more or less illustrated with characteristic engravings on Nor must we forget to mention the Sunday Novel, for only by such a title can we distinguish the continuous stories that appear in this magazine. The present volume contains two such tales, unexceptionable in manner and matter, and exceedingly well told and interesting:—"The Story of the Mine," and a "Chronicle of Struggles and Hones" in addition to see the struggles and the see and the second secon Hopes," in addition to several short narratives, among which "A Bad Speculation" is to be specially noticed for its admirable tone of gentle reproof of a very common failing—discontent with our lot in life. When we add that all, or nearly all, the tales, essays, lessons, poems, and homilies, are fairly distinguished by the names of their several writers, we shall have said sufficient to commend this handsome and portly volume to the favourable attention of a large and rapidly increasing class of readers.

Good Words for the Young for 1871. Edited by George Mac Donald. (Strahan and Co.).—With its "Lilliput Lectures," its Fables and Poems, its bright little Essays, its bits of Natural History, and its instructive articles on the "Keeping of Home Pets," it is no wonder that Good Words for the Young is a favourite and popular magazine with those sharpest of critics, book-loving boys and girls. The piece de resistance, however, in this volume—a handsome octavo, in a cover of blue and condem's a nanosome octavo, in a cover of blue and gold, with a title-page of flowers—is Mr. Charles Camden's story, "When I was Young," the scene of which is laid in Wales, with the incidents of the every-day life of the present pleasantly contrasted with the events that happened "ever so long ago in the old Catholic times." Some young readers may prefer the editor's fair tell times. long ago in the old Catholic times." Some young readers may prefer the editor's fairy tale, "The Princess and the Goblin," but our own preference—perhaps, because we are no longer young —must certainly be given to the other story. In their strong, neat green covers, these "Shilling Guides"—admirably printed, and accurately illustrated with numerous cuts from photographs and original sketches-contain all that the ordinary original sections—contain an triat the original strength of the first tourist requires to know, written in a graphic, yet plain, straightforward style, that at once recommends itself. In addition to everything that needs be told of the history, antiquities, gights, records buildings and recollarities of the district people, buildings, and peculiarities of the district or town described, these new Guides afford authentic information as to railway routes and fares, coach roads, cars, steamboats, hotels, lodgings, postal arrangements, and the distances from place to place; so that the intending traveller may, even before he starts from home, mark out his route upon the map, and calculate his direct outlay to a shilling. With one of these handy little books in his pocket, he may dispense with that terrible nuisance, the "Professional Guide;" and, while travelling by rail or steamer, he may make himself sufficiently familiar with the place to which he is going, as almost to avoid that "stranger" air so well-known to natives, and so disagreeable to the stranger himself. Many of these books having gone through six or seven editions, further recommendation is unnecessary; though we may add that each Guide has been thoroughly revised from

SCHOOL AT a time when there is so much laudable activity in the production of School Books intended for the use of the humbler classes it will be of interest to glance at those used by previous generations. Unfortunately the materials at our command are scanty;—preceding bibliographers not having thought such humble productions worthy of notice. Mr. Lowndes and his recent editors, while willing to spend any amount of trouble on a scarce volume of early poetry, did not even care to re-cord the names of such useful men as Dilworth or We have therefore had to make our way, unassisted, through the Catalogue of the British Museum Library - a library rich in all that is rare and valuable, and also much that is rare and valueless, but singularly deficient in the books of which we have been in search. To the following bibliography, which is, to the best of our know ledge, the first of its kind, many additions may, no doubt, be made; but, though incomplete, it will be of interest at the present time.

The first impulse to education was given by the Reformation in the time of Edward VI., when so many Grammar Schools were founded. These capacity intended for the middle and intended for the middle a schools, intended for the middle and upper classes, were placed under the direction of those who thought all learning commenced with the Latin Grammar; consequently, plain English was relegated to the dame who received children from the nursery. It was not till the early part of the eighteenth century that much attention was given to the education of the children of the poor. Then sprang up Charity Schools in all directions; but these, after a while, became stationary and lifeless. The next movement was caused by the adoption of the Lancasterian system by the British and Foreign School Society in 1808, and that of Bell by the National Society in 1811. From that date primary schools increased rapidly. greatest impetus to national education was given by the formation of the COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL, and by the grant of $30,000 in 1839, and the gradual enlargement of the sum, which last year amounted to £915,000. Many books were published in connection with both National and British schools, and a few good ones, notably those of Mr. Crossley, Dr. Cornwell, and Mr. Martin; but most of the books were poor and commonplace. Meantime, but little alteration took place in the books made use of in the day schools for the classes immediately above the poor; such books as the masters and mistresses themselves had learned out of served to teach from. first great change in the style of school book dates from the time when the Irish School Commissioners, finding the need of, books to suit their requirements, determined to construct an entirely new series; but of these and of the various series which have since appeared, we must speak in a future article.

SPELLING BOOKS.

The first English Spelling Book proper was the HORNBOOK, of which several examples exist in the British Museum and elsewhere. Hornbooks generally consisted of the alphabet, the Lord's Prayer, and some few lines of spelling and reading, printed on paper covered with a thin layer of transparent horn, to keep them from being torn or defaced by the scholar; the whole enclosed in a wooden frame with a handle. They were in general we in the floanth a handle. They were in general use in the fifteenth century, and were not quite discarded in village schools till comparatively recent times. Mr. Halliwell states that as lately as 1716 Hornbooks were commonly sold by the booksellers at twopence each. To them succeeded the BATTLEDORE, probably so called from the Hornbook having been employed as a toy. The Battledore was a book of three leaves, the two sides folding over the centre in the manner of a Triptych: it is not yet quite obsolete, and the curious in such matters may still obtain copies from the Catnach press, in Seven Dials.

The PRIMER was not a Spelling Book only, but a reading-book, hymn-book, spelling-book, and picture-book combined. Many modern forms of the old Primer are still published by Messrs. Mozley, of Derby; handy little sixpenny books in stout paper covers, with leather little sixpenny books in stout paper covers, with leather backings. They are severally known as Bell's Spelling Primer, Davie's Introduction to Reading, Mostey's First Book for Children, Warmington's First Step, the Weald's Original Reading Made Easy, and Watt's Reading Made Easy, Of the numerous school books so well known under the generic title of "Reading Made Easy," we find but a single specimen in the British Museum Library:—Reading Made Easie in Reading Made Easy, "We find but a single specimen in the British Museum Library:—Reading Made Easie and the Rest Guide to the Fender Capacities of Children. By T. Wise, schoolmaster, London, Picked and sold by J. Hollis, 21, Shoemaker Row, Blackand sold by J. Hollis, 21, Shoemaker Row, Black-friars. Price Sixpence. Apparently issued about This little book contains much the same sort of instruction as its modern successors. It is in its original binding of gaudily-stained paper boards with sheepskin back, and has evidently seen considerable wear and tear, for several of its pages are defaced and wear and tear, for several of its pages are defacted and solided, and the rude woodcuts heading the fables of the "Wolf and the Crane," the "Lion and the Mouse," &c., are scrawled over with pen and pencil marks. Each reading lesson—several of them from Scriptura—is headed with a list of the hard words in marks. Each reading lesson—several of them from Scripture—is headed with a list of the hard words in the lesson itself; and the pretty little poems at the end are fitly followed by an injunction to all good boys and girls to "say their prayers night and morning for which God Almighty will love and bless of the same b log, for which God Almighty will love and bless them, and will watch over them while they sleep that no evil will come near them, so that they may arise no evil will come near them, so that they may arise in the morning, wash their faces and hands, comb their hair, and then go to school and learn their books." None of its modern relations exceed this "Redynadesy" in simplicity of plan and thoroughness of purpose; though they all profess to be "revised and improved." The only other noticeable books of this kind with which we are acquianted revised and improved. In eonly other noticeable books of this kind with which we are acquainted, are Pinnock's Child's First Book, and his Mentorian Primer; or, second book; severally published at threepence and sixpence, by Messrs. Whittaker, and the province and sixpence, by Messrs.

Of SPELLING BOOKS proper there have been pub lished, during the last three centuries, many and curious varieties; some of which we proceed to notice. They are all, or nearly all, we may state, however, in ramo, and possess several features in common—spelling lessons being interspersed with reading, short fables, poems, hymns, and, in some instances, tables of weights and measures. For convenience sake we will take them chronologically.

English being taught in such dames' schools as that described by Shenstone, or perhaps picked up, as by Cowper, at the mother's knee.

1580.—"Bullokar's Booke at Large, for the amendment of Orthographie and English Speech. Imprinted at London by Henrie Denham." This curious black-letter Spelling Book has a preface by W. B., who tells us that he "did meane to put it in print aboue two year's past had I not then vnderstanded by a friende of mine that the like was already handled, and in print, by Sir Thomas Smith and Maister Chester, of whose works (nor the like done by any other) I neuer vnderstood vntill then." We have been unable to find the books referred to as by Sir Thomas Smith and Maister Chester in the British Museum Library. "Bullokar's Booke at Large" passed through several editions.

1633.—"The English Grammar, or the Institution of Letters, Syllables, and Words in the English Tongue, whereunto is annexed an Index of Words Alike and Unlike," is the next in order. It was printed and sold at Oxford by William Turner, for the author "Charles Butler, Master of Arts, Magdalen College." It contains many of the characteristics common to later Spelling Books. In it we find, for the first time, parallel columns of "words similar in sound but different in spelling and signification."

1668.—"English Orthographie, or the Art of right Spelling, Reading, Pronouncing and Writing all sorts of English words, wherein such as one can possibly mistake, are digested in an Alphabetical Order, under their several short yet plain rules," &c.; printed at Oxford for Henry Hall, and published in London by Francis Titon, at the Three Daggers in Fleet-street. This book, without any author's name, was probably compiled by Messrs, Price and Owen, Oxford students, and who in the advertisement at the end are accredited with the authorship of other educational works. The instructions are in question and answer, and, like its successors, consist not alone of spelling lessons, but a little of everything, fairly well arranged.

Perused and proceed by Dublick authority, and now the 37th Free School in St. Edmuns, Duly, Addition approved by publick authority, and now the 37th time Imprinted: with Certain Copies to write by, at the Ende of this Book added." "Printed by A. Maxwell for the Company of Stationers, 1673;" in black well for the Company of Stationers, 1673; letter and Roman type, in question and answer, thus:—"Master.—How write you people? Scholar.—I cannot write. M.—I mean not so, but when tax.—I cannot write. M.—I mean not so, but when I say write, I mean spell; for, in my meaning, they are both one. Of the previous thirty-six editions none are to be found in the British Museum Library. inquiry at Stationers' Hall for one or more of the thirty-seven editions of this book, we were politely informed that "nothing whatever was known about it; that at present there was no record of its publication: "that it "might be examined at the British Museum;" that the authorities "could afford no sort of information as to the book or its author;" and that, in fact, the "English Schoolmaster" was an utter stranger in Stationers' Hall, where a "Gradus is the only survivor of the numerous family of school

1677.—"A New Spelling Book of Reading and Spelling English made Easie; wherein all the words of our English Bible are set down in an alphabetical order, and divided into their distinct syllables. Thomas Dyche, [now] schoolmaster of the Free School at Stratford-le-Bow, in Middlesex. Third Edition, corrected, 1731. Published by Richard Ware." The book has been reprinted many times, and formed the basis of Dyche's New General English Dictionary, which, being first published in 1735, preceded Johnson's by twenty years. The death of its author taking place in 1733, it was finished by "William Pardon, Gent.," and went through many editions; the eighteenth—the latest we have seen—bearing date 1740.—" Spelling New Modelled." By William Pardon, Gent., of St. John's College, Cambridge; published by Richard Ware. A version of Dyche's "Spelling Dictionary." in which this scholar had apparently some hand.

1740-1751.—New Guide to the English Tongue.

By Thomas Dilworth, author of the "Schoolmaster's Assistant," and "Schoolmaster in Wappin," whence he dates his sensibly-written preface. Published by he dates his sensibly-written preface. Published by Henry Kent, at the printing office in Finch Lane, near the Royal Exchange. The thirteenth edition, the earliest we can find, bears date 1751; and is substantially the same book as is now published and still used in some country schools. Looking at it now is like renewing acquaintance with an early friend. The face of the honest schoolmaster gleams forth as of old, and the dedication " to the promoters of the several charity schools in Great Britain and Ireland," is still printed at the back of the title-page, just as it was a century and a quarter ago. early editions of Dilworth-a book that retained its popularity for nearly a hundred years—appear recom-mendations from no fewer than eighty London schoolmasters; among whom were John Entick, author of the Dictionary, and then head master of Bancroft's School, Mile End; Matthew Audley, and Dr. Leonard Howard, chaplain to the Prince of Wales. The rough but graphic woodcuts of the Armadillo and the Badger, with the rest of the animals illustrating all the letters down to Z, still adorn the alphabet—also given in the next page in three characters, Roman, Italic, and Old English. Then follow the "Easy Lessons in Spelling and Pacifice" in words of sea calleble, two stillables. Reading," in words of one syllable, two syllables, three, four, five, and six syllables; the "Proper Names of Persons and Places usually beginning with a Capital;" the "Table of Words the same in Sound but different in Meaning;" the "Tatle of Words the same in Sound but different in Meaning;" the "Practical English Grammar," the useful "Collection of Sentences in Prose and Verse, divine, moral, and historical; "followed but this included by the same that the same lowed by the irrepressible fables, with their indestructible woodcuts and their undeniable morals; concluding with "Grace before Meat, and Particular Forms of Prayer for Children on several occasions."

The Spelling Books published about this time, and all their successors, have been, more or less, con-structed on the models afforded by Dyche and Dilworth. Even the publication of Johnson's Dictionary, in 1775, caused no sensible improvement or modification in the plan of school books. It was doubtless felt by schoolmasters, then as now, that the multiplication of books was a matter to be avoided, and that the most desirable volume was one of convenient the most desirable volume was one of convenient dimensions, containing much varied information. The Dictionary, the Grammar, the Geography, the Arithmetic, the Histories, the Reader and the Speaker of the higher schools were all combined in the Guide prepared by the "Wappin" schoolmaster. 1775.—This year, distinguished educationally by the publication of Johnson's Dictionary—the first edition of which, in 2 vols. folio, was adorned with a coutstion from Horace and contained the celebrated.

quotation from Horace and contained the celebrated, but afterwards omitted, definition of Pensioner-was also noted among schoolmasters for the first issue of also noted among schoolmasters for the first issue of Fenning's Universal Spelling Book, a compilation which exists, equally with the Doctor's great work, as a standard school book. Daniel Fenning, a schoolmaster at Bures, in Essex, also wrote many elementary treatises—On the Use of the Globes, Practical Arithmetic, Guide to Algebra, the Young Man's Book of Knowledge, a New Grammar, and a Royal English Dictionary. His Spelling Book was, in fact, a Spelling Book, Dictionary, Grammar, and Reading Book all in one. In it first appeared those wonderful fables "The Priest and the Jester," "The Town in Danger of a Siege, "&c.: the "Story of Smith, Brown, Jones, and Robinson," showing how Smith was drowned and the others were severally whipped-one because he could not swim, the second because he could swim a little, and the third because he could swim very well; and the de-lectable history of Tommy and Harry, with its application—"Learn then betimes, O Youth, to know your duty to God, your parents, and mankind. Prefaced by a Dedication to Slingsby Bethel, Lord Mayor and M.P. for London, in which the writer says manfully that his design was "to teach the children something more than barely to spell and read." The book begins with the alphabet in Roman and Italic, and old English capitals and small letters; and goes on step by step through the entire school course, ending with a short poetic address to the reader, requesting him to study carefully, and at the same time be charitable in his censure-

For be an author e'er so wise and wary, He may in some particulars miscarry.

Many times revised and reprinted, with the chronological and other tables brought up to the date of publication, the last issue carries the date to the Christening of the Prince of Wales, in 1842. Fenning's Spelling Book has held its own—as it de-served to do—for more than a hundred years; and fully bears out its author's intention to "inculcate into the minds of youth early notions of Religion and Virtue, and point out to them their several Duties in the various stages of life." Notwithstanding the higher demands of education in the present day, than this we find no modern Spelling Book more fully answering its special purpose. Up to this date our Northern brethren had not discovered their special aptitude for teaching the English language, for the first purely Scottish book we find in the Museum Library bears the date of-

1761.—"An English Spelling Book for Use in Schools. By Arthur Masson, M.A., Teacher of Languages in Edinburgh." Printed, for the author, by Hamilton, Balfour, and Neil. It contains a long preface explanatory of the plan adopted, which is neither novel nor particularly simple.

1762.—"The Scripture Spelling Book; or an Assistant to Families and Schoolboys in Reading the Assistant to ramines and schoolboys in Reading the Old and New Testament; being a new attempt, and upon a plan quite different from all other Spelling Books. By William Ward, Schoolmaster at Hinckley, Printed by T. Luckman, Coventry, and sold by B. Dod, in Ave-Mary-Lane." Also "Dedicated to the Promoters of English Schools." This Spelling Book is arranged on an elaborate but troublesome plan, and does not appear to have been reprinted.

1767 .- " Grammatical Introduction to the Modern 1767.—"Grammatical introduction to instance Pronunciation of the English Tongue, for Private Perusal and Public Schools. By John Drummond, Teacher of English in Edinburgh. Printed (for the author) by A. Donaldson, and sold at his shops in London and Edinburgh, and by other booksellers in Scotland." The motive of this work is found in a sentence:—"We ought to retain as many vowels, and drop as many consonants as we can, consistently with the practice of the best authors, and the pro-nunciation of our language." Followed by examples of spelling in a rather confused though elaborate method.

1769.--" A Key to Letters: or, a Complete Intro-1709.—"A Rey to Letters: or, a Complete Intro-duction to Spelling and Reading, after a New, Easy, and Familiar Method. By Charles Bryant, School-master in Norwich. Printed by J. Crouse, and sold by the author, and by E. Johnson, Ave Mary Lane, London." Preceded by a long preface con-taining numerous testimonials from persons of unrecognizable merit.

1769.—"A New Spelling Book, in which the rules of Spelling and Pronouncing the English Language are Exemplified and Explained. By William Adie, Schoolmaster in Paisley. Printed, for the author, by A. Weir and A. M'Lean, Paisley." A pamphlet of 18 pages, apparently intended rather for ripe scholars, than for pupils in schools, giving special attention to the dropped letters in certain wordsas leather, ready, honest, pedagogue, character, &c.

The forerunner of the principle in spelling subsequently advocated by the "Fonetic Nuz."

1770.—Spelling Lessons. Printed by S. Bailey, 50, Bishopsgate Street, and "sold in sheets for the conveniency of the schoolmasters who are studious to avoid Expense to the Friends of their Pupils," so that a single book may be "divided among three or four classes." Sixty-four pages, price ninerence, with

1771.—" New and Improved Spelling Dictionary of the English Language; teaching to write as well as to spell correctly;" to which are added a Grammar, a List of Proper Names of Men and Women, and a Dissertation on the use of Capital Letters in writing, then absurdly common. The anonymous author dedicates his work to the "Learned and Ingenious Dr. Samuel Johnson;" and in his preface he declares that his "Book has the peculiar Advantage of Dr. Samuel Jonson; and it ms preface ne declares that his "Book has the peculiar Advantage of directing the unlearned to write as well as to spell with propriety." This is a spelling book proper, the meaning of the words not being given. London:

Published by T. Longman. 1771 .- "Grammatical Spelling Book, wherein after a new, concise, and rational method, are exhibited the most common words; and, secondly, the most difficult words in the English Language. To which is added Mnemonics, or the Art of Memory, whereby Youth may be taught to remember much with little trouble. By J. Green, Master of the Academy in Denmark Street. Printed for the Author." This is not a Spelling Book, properly so called, but a list of words belonging to Arts, Sciences, History, Commerce, &c., arranged in lines-as, Law: plaintiff, defendant, subpoena, affidavit, writ, summons, arrest, &c.; the Mnemonics consisting of the substitution of figures for letters, as I for a, b, and g; a for e, d, and h, and so on; after thoroughly conquering which complications the reader's memory is presumed to be sufficiently exercised to remember long strings of dates, names, and places. and places. A similar plan was proposed, and a similar book was published, in 1845.

1775.—" The Town and Country Spelling Book, with an appendix containing observations on accent, emphasis, pauses, &c. By Cortes Telfair, Curer of Impediments in Speech, in Edinburgh." Printed for Charles Elliot, Parliament Close, This is a very curious example of almost incomprehensible printing, as may be seen by a single quotation :- im-mat-e-ri-alit-y im-men-su-rab-il-it-y in-com-pat-ib-il-it-y nat-u-ral-iz-a-tion in-div-is-ib-il-it-y con-tu-me-li-ous-ly enthu-si-ast-ic-al-ly. After the scholar has got over the difficulties of the spelling lessons, he comes to pages of reading lessons printed without spaces between the words, and fables with morals that read like oracles. Any one who could read this book without nistakes would inevitably be cured of stuttering.

1776.—The Royal Golden Instructor for Youth throughout the British Dominions, in order to furnish them with a complete knowledge of their mother-language: being a copious abridgment of the Royal Universal British Grammar and Vocabulary, &c. By D. Ferroe, M.D.; inscribed, by permission, to "their most excellent and illustrious Majesties George ther most excellent and illustrious Majesties George the Third and Queen Charlotte."

1789-1793.—The New London Spelling Book; or, the Young Gentleman's and Lady's Guide to the English Tongue. By Charles Vyse, author of the "Tutor's Guide," &c. With a roughly-engraved steel-plate portrait of the author with his name in school-text beneath, this differs little from its predecessors. Like Dilworth's Spelling Book, it commences with the alphabet followed by a series of commences with the alphabet, followed by a series of little cuts, in this case representing the people of "various nations," including a Quaker under Q, Xenophon under X, and a Yorkshireman under Y; Achieved the reading and spelling lessons regularly progressing from a, b, ab, to a "short account of the Kings and Queens of England," and concluding with the Church Catechism. Than this, no better spelling book for children attending parish and other elementary schools had yet been published. In his preface, dated from New Quebec Street, Portman Square, Mr. Vyse says:

-" I shall not follow the ungenerous though commo maxim of endeavouring to raise the merits of my own performance by depreciating the labours of those who have written on the same subject. They have all used their best endeavours to promote the education of youth, and have therefore deserved well of the public."
The earliest edition in the British Museum Library is the eleventh, printed for G. G. and J. Robinson, in Paternoster Row, in 1793. Vyse's Spelling is still printed and sold, though not largely; the preface and catechism being omitted, and portraits of George IV., William IV., and the Queen added in Messrs. Mozley's edition, for which a new and not improved frontispiece seems to have been engraved. Vyse's Spelling Book should have been a fortune to its Spelling Book should have been a fortune to its original publishers, for on their failure we find that the copyright fetched £2,500, the only payment to the author being £50 a year.

1794.—A Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary for the Use of Schools. By Alexander Barrie, teacher of English in Edinburgh. Printed and sold for the author. Though called a dictionary, this is a mere spelling book of words without definitions, with directions without definitions, with directions. spelling book of words without definitions, with directions for their pronunciation at the head of each column, in the manner familiar in Walker and Sheri dan. The late Dr. Nuttall seems to have taken Barrie's book for his model, for, like him, he makes full and pull rhyme with dull and gull, and to have followed him generally in his Scotticisms. In this pretentious and now unknown Spelling Book, Mr. Barrie seems to have been impressed in common Barrie seems to have been impressed-in common with many of his countrymen—with the value of the sentence on the title-page to David Brown's treatise on writing, published in 1638, and dedicated to the most "illustrious and hopeful Charles Prince of Wales:" "Whereby it will rather follow, that a Scotishman is so much the more able to prosecute whatsoever hee undertaketh, and therefore so much the more to bee respected, by how much hee is more ingenious than one of any other nation,"—a sentiment to which all modern to be the sentence of the s modern Scotchmen will yield their willing and hearty assent and consent. The italics are Mr. Brown's own.

1799.—The English Spelling Book and Expositor; 1799.—Inc English Spelling Book and Expositor; being a new method of teaching children and adult persons to read, write, and understand the English Language, &c., by Henry Boad, schoolmaster at Colchester, reached a twenty-first edition. Published by Robinson, Baldwin, and Richardson.

1790-1800. — An Introduction to Spelling and Reading English. By William Markham. Portrait of the author in a full-bottomed wig and clerical band. Printed by W. Davidson of Alawick. It differs from the other coefficients and a full-bottomed with the period. It differs from the other spelling books of the period in nothing but the introduction of a new set of illustrated the state of the sta trated fables, with extraordinarily wordy morals, still retained in the modern editions issued by Messrs.

1801. - The English Spelling Book, accompanied by a Progressive Series of Easy and Familiar Lessons; intended as an Introduction to the Reading and Spelling of the English Language. By William Mayor, LL.D. The earliest edition in the British Museum Library is the 322nd, dated 1826; and the only other edition of Mavor in the Catalogue is the 1826 and 1826; is the 468th, published in Paris, and sold at Baudry's European Library, 1859. In it the old cuts have been re-engraved; but the frontispiece still represents the old schoolmaster in the mids of his class, and the dame surrounded by quainty-dressed girls. In other editions of Mavor we have a younger master with a cane on his shoulder, and a young mistress teaching a group of in-quiring girls. The preface of the first edition seems to have been retained in all the issues, with alterations from time to time to suit the circumstances of the day. The preface itself is a marvel of natural modesty. Dr. Mayor was a native of Aberdeenshire, a county that has supplied a large number of modern educators. He says:—"Notwithstanding the vast number of initiatory books for children in the nursery which have been written within the last few years by persons of distinguished abilities, and sanctioned with their names, it must still be allowed that there has not appeared one introduction to reading for the general use of schools that rises above the level of the vulgar though popular compilations of Dyche, Dilworth, and Fenning;" implying, of course, that the Doctor's own book is infinitely superior to anything that had been before published. And then in the preface to a later edition he adds:—"Amidst all its competitors, it has maintained its rank in the public esteem, and now seems to have acquired the puonic esteem, and now seems to have acquired the privileged respect due to age and long standing, when accompanied with acknowledged ability." Myriads of Mavor's Spelling Book must have been sold, and it still retains a large degree of popularity; the more especially as it has been constituted in the special serviced expenses. rected and revised as new editions have been demanded. Messrs. Mozley have two versions, the latter, and better patronized, having a certain number of original hymns for children, by the late Mrs. Thomas Mozley, sister of the Rev. Dr. Newman. Mavor, however, is by no means a spelling-book pure and simple, but a kind of universal first book for the junior classes. The later editions are printed on good paper, and are in every way commendable

1809.—The Christian Child's Spelling Book. By Robert Torkington, printed for J. Mawman, 22, Poultry. Differs from the rest only in the reading lessons, barbarously illustrated, being selected from the Scriptures.

1800-10.—Spelling Book designed to render the Acquisition of our Native Language Easy and Pleasant. By "Mrs. Teachwell," a nom de plume we sant. By "Mrs. Teachwell," a nom de plume we find attached to various books for children—as "Cobwebs to Catch Flies," in words of one syllable; "The Good Child's Delight," "Stories for Little Folk, "&c.; more or less "adorned with cuts," and published by Messrs. J. Marshall & Co., Aldermary Churchyard, in Bow Lane, The same publishers issued Mrs. Trimmer's Spelling Book.

purpose of grounding young persons more effectually in spelling and pronunciation." By Thos. Carpenter-Published by Messrs. Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, and Brown, Paternoster Row. Here are lessons for every day in the week, "so that what is learned during the six days of one week may be recapitulated on the following Monday." With this exception, Carpenter's Spelling Book differs little from Dilworth and

1822.—The Child's Friend; being an entirely new and systematic arrangement of all the sounds, combinations of character, and exceptions in the English language; calculated to facilitate its easy and early acquisition, &c. By the Rev. W. Draper. Printed, for the author, and sold by W. Teape, Tower Hill, and Darton and Harvey, Gracechurch Street. An elaborate, and—so far as children are concerned elaborate, and—so tar as condition are consulting arrangement of words, followed by an Essay

The writer promises a "Regular on Grammar. The writer promises a "Regular Spelling Book," but the success of his "Child's Friend" was apparently not such as to induce any publisher to bring it out.

1826.—Manson's Spelling Book, intended to be used in private families and schools. Printed and published by T. Mairs, of Belfast. Without novelty, the reading lessons and fables illustrated with woodcuts of the old, unattractive pattern.

1826 .- Inchbold's Edition of Markham. proved, printed, and sold by the publisher, T. Inch-bold, of Leeds. The only improvement we can dis-cover—and that is doubtful—is in the omission of the woodcuts.

1826.-New English Spelling Book; or, a Key to the Accentuation and Pronunciation of the English Language; carefully selected from the best Dictionaries by John Robinson. Printed for J. Nunn, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and G. B. Whittaker, Ave Maria Lane. A school book on the regular plan. Noticeable, first, as having a more agreeable frontispiece than usual; representing the author (we presume) being presented by a winged Fame to King George the Fourth; and the school-master leading a lad from the school-door into the fields, with the motto beneath from Thomson:—

"Delightful task! to rear the tender thought, And teach the young idea how to shoot."

And, secondly, by the introduction of pleasing woodcuts by William Harvey.

1827.—An English Spelling on the Plan of Mavor.

Printed and published by J. Patterson, at the King Street Academy, Kilmarnock: the title followed by a rather full list of errata.

1827.—The Scholar's Spelling Assistant, wherein the words are arranged on an improved Plan, according to their respective principles of accentuation, in a manner calculated to familiarize the art of spelling and pronunciation, to remove difficulties, and to facilitate improvement. By Thomas Car-penter. New edition, corrected: Longmans. The sequel to this was the English Vocabulary; the two forming, indeed, regular class books for use in ordi-nary schools. We find no earlier edition in the British Museum Library.

1828.—The English Spelling Book, on a plan calculated to correct Provincialisms; with a variety of reading lessons, compiled by Thomas West, late master of the Free English School, Dedham; published by Harvey and Darton; by way of frontispiece, a schoolmaster decorating a deserving scholar with a medal; an improvement on the ferule and

1829.—An English Spelling Book, containing the Common Words in the Language, with an Appendix of Useful Tables. By Rev. Richard Roc.
Published by W. Curry and Co., Dublin. This Spelling Book is compiled on a thoroughly clear and well defined plan, showing (1) the sounds of the letters, (2) the quantities of the syllables, and (3) a rhythmical classification of words; followed by tables of words of unsettled spelling and pronunciation—as chemistry and chymistry, choir and quire, haunt, &c. 1829.—English Spelling Book; compiled on the plan of Vyse, and published by J. G. Russher, Banbury, with a steel-plate engraving from a drawing by H. Corbould, representing boys and girls in the school and in the play-ground, with Minerva and a Master of Arts looking on: more complete as a Spelling, Grammar, and Reading Book than most of its contemporaries.

1830.—First School Spelling Book. By George Heaven: Published at Souter's School Library, St. By George Paul's Churchyard, and forming one of a large list of school books issued by that firm during a long course

1831.-William Cobbett's Spelling Book, published at II, Bolt Court, Fleet Street. Curious now only on account of its author's outspoken preface, in which he derides the introduction in school books of " religion, arithmetic, geography, astronomy, and a dozen other things;" but as a school book it is, like his Grammar, without authority. The frontispiece and woodcuts have, however, been since used in other compilations.

1831.—''A Manual of Etymology; or Vocabulary of English Words derived from the Latin Language, principally through the medium of the French; with notes explanatory and philological. By Robert Sul-livan, A.B.T.C.D." Intended to be used by young students in French and Latin as a Spelling Book and Vocabulary; and, as it strikes us, a most useful elementary work for English scholars. Published by John Cumning, Lower Ormond Quay, Dublin, 1834.—"The Anti-spelling Book;" a new system Teaching to Read without Spelling. Published by Messrs. Bull and Churton, 26, Holles Street. 1837.—The New London Spelling Book, by W. Walker. Second edition, revised and improved; though in what we are unable to discern.

1837.—"Pinnock: Explanatory English Spelling Book in Institution of the Spelling With Institution of the Inst

A really attractive volume, containing all the usual con-tents of a Spelling Book arranged upon a well-de-fined plan, with the syllabication and pronunciation of the words distinctly marked; with several fairly illustrated reading lessons, preceded by a steel-plate frontispiece by Corbould, representing "Wisdom introducing the industrious to the Temple of Happiness, while she ejects the idle and unworthy."

A well-compiled book divided into progressions. sive lessons for the several classes of scholars, with reading lessons added, in prose and verse; tables of weights and measures, &c. In this, as in other Spelling Books of the period, the old leaven is observable in the shape of a woodcut representing a schoolmaster with a cane in the midst of a ring of unhappy-looking old-fashioned boys. The constant occurrence of this type of illustration is remarkable; indeed, the schoolmaster with the birch or ferule will be found on many public school seals.

1839.—Kenny's Grammatical Spelling Assistant; constructed upon the plan of Vyse and Carpenter, without the woodcuts, and published by T. Allman, Holborn Hill, in 1839. An unmistakeable school book in buff sheepskin.

1839 .- New Derivative Spelling Book; in which are given not only the origin of each word from the Greek, Latin, French, &c., but their present acceptation. A useful compilation, by J. Rowbotham, author of several accepted school books and published by Harray and Darts.

horrible woodcut frontispiece. Printed and published by C. and E. J. Rattenbury, Devonport.

1843.—The Phontic Spelling Book, exhibiting all the Monosyllables of the English Language, under a fourfold arrangement.—(1) Their rowel sounds; (2) their terminational arrangement; (3) their initial arrangement; (4) words in their common orthography. An attempt to popularize spelling by sound. Published by Isaac Pitman, at the Phonographic Institution, Nelson Place, Bath, and sold by S. Bagster and Sons, Paternoster Row. ster and Sons, Paternoster Row.

1843 (circa).—Young's Pronouncing and Elymological Spelling Book; adapted for junior and senior classes to the purposes of liberal education, in which the principles of pronunciation and etymology are gradually developed; and the Greek, Latin, French roots of several thousand words added; French roots of several thousand words added; together with etymological exercises, critical observations, &c. By Townsend Young, LL.D. Published by Messrs. Machen, Dublin.

1850.—The Indestructible Spelling Book, printed on linen; the first of a somewhat large but hardly popular family of school books; as the Prince of Wales Priner, &c. Published by Messrs. Cundall and Addey, Old Bond Street.

1871.—Butter's Reading and Spelling, in easy gradations, upon an entirely original plan, by which dissyllables are rendered as easy as monosyllables;

gradations, upon an entirely original plan, by which dissyllables are rendered as easy as monosyllables; 57th edition.—By the same author, Butler's Etymological Spelling Book and Expositor; 316th edition.—Butler's Gradual Primer; 48th edition. Published for the author by Whittaker and Co.—We are unable to state when these books were first published, but the first edition of the Etymological Spelling Book probably made its appearance about 1830. Mr. Butter was one of the earliest to trace the etymologies of words, and for a long time had the field almost entirely to himself. The book still maintains its popularity, notwithstanding an elaborate attempt on the part of the Saturday Review to write it down.

Without Date, though probably first published in the early part of the present century, and at various periods since:

Duncan's English Expositor, or Explanatory Spelling Book; a school dictionary of words, divided into syllables and accented, with the derivations attached. Published by Messrs. Whittaker.

Guy's Analytical Spelling Book and Expositor. Fisher, Son, and Co.—This was probably brought out in opposition to Guy's New Britisk Spelling Book, published by Messrs. Cradock and Co., and Co. stated, in 1844, to have arrived at a 69th edition. A companion to this book -Guy's New British Expositor—reached, at the same date, a 10th edition; while Guy's New British Primer had reached its 22nd edition. Guy was, we believe, a non de plume assumed by Sir Richard Phillips, who had probably employed a person of that name upon some of his earlier compilations.

earner compilations. Etymological Expositor, by Benson Bailey, Skipton in Craven; a dictionary of words and meanings. Published by Messrs. Richardson and Son, London, Dublin, and Derby.

New English Spelling Book, containing every English Radical word in modern use. By J. B. Pike, D.D. An exceedingly well-printed book, published by Messrs, Simokin and Marshall.

by Messrs. Simpkin and Marshall.

The Infant's Spelling Book and Pictorial Dictionary. By F. Wilby; a book on a good plan, with little woodcuts inserted in the text, explanatory of all the principal words in the reading and spelling lessons.
Published, for the author, by Messrs. Darton and Clarke

Spelling and Reading Book, upon New Principles, by J. F. Denham, M.A. Eighteenth edition. Simpkin and Marshall. The principle of classification and progression pursued seems well adapted for infant progression pursued seems well adapted to make teaching; each reading lesson embodying the words of the previous column of spelling; the latter selected with care from those words which have nearly the same sound in combination as when progressions. same sound in combination as when pronounced separately; the construction of the words explained, and the steps upward from the alphabet so clearly and simply defined as to render the progress of the pupil easy and pleasant.

Webster's "Spellers."—Various attempts have been made to naturalize "Webster," who, in various forms, takes the most prominent place among elementary school books in America; but hitherto the attempt has not been successful, and although several books have appeared with the name of Webster, we refrain from giving their titles, as they scarcely come under our legitimate notice.

As will have been seen, many of the old and accepted spelling books are still kept in print, though their sale is necessarily affected by the publication of their modern—though not, in all cases, improved—competitors. Another notice-able fact may be mentioned in connection with school books, and that is the binding. In all the older books attention was paid to this; it was considered necessary that the books should be strong enough to bear the rough usage they were liable to at school; the boards were strongly fastened to the books, and the covers to the boards. We still have the "Walkingame" we used, from addition to decimals dogseared and scribbled in, with numerous specimens of our artistic skill, with the corners worn and covers well battered, but the boards as firmly fixed as when the hands were first boards as firmly fixed as when the bands were first drawn through. Such a thing is impossible with books of the present day; none are well sewn or fastened to the boards, all appear to be merely intended for temporary use.

DRAWING COPY BOOKS.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of SHAW'S SERIES of 1d. and 2d. DRAWING COPY BOOKS, will be ready early next month. Nos. 4 to 40 are also in preparation. Most of the advanced copies are drawn by some of the best artists of the day, and with the process of Graphotype Engraving a freedom of style can be got by far superior to any other method. Drawing copies printed from wood have a stiffness about them which is anything but desirable, whilst by making use of Graphotype Engravings we get the Artist's own work, as the lines drawn by him remain to be printed from.

MESSRS. BELL & DALDY'S PUBLICATIONS.

SHORTLY, in 2 vols.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF THOMAS CHATTERTON.

Edited by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT, late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Vol. I. contains a Memoir of the Poet, the Satires, and other acknowledged Poems, and a Selection from Letters and Prose Writings.

Vol. II. contains the Poems ascribed to the mythical monk Thomas Rowley, preceded by an Essay establishing their modern fabrication.

The special feature of this Edition is that the pseudo-antique phraseology and spelling have been so modernized, that while all essential characteristics have been preserved, the so-called Rowley Poems are for the first time presented in a form which allows of their undoubted merit being appreciated by the general reader.

The ART of SKETCHING from NATURE.

By Philip H. Delamotte, Professor of Drawing at King's College, London. Illustrated with Twenty-four Woodcuts and Twenty-five Chromo-Lithographs. Imperial 4to, price £3 3s. [Just Published.]

This Volume is put forward as a Complete Practical Guide and Assistant to all who desire to study the art of Sketching from Nature in Water-colours. The course of instruction is illustrated by Progressive Examples in Chromo-Lithography. These are reproductions of Water-colour Drawings by PROUT, E. W. COOKE, R.A., GIRTIN, VARLEY, DEWINT, BIRKET FOSTER, G. THOMAS, and the Author, and will give the book a permanent value to all lovers of English art.

"Written not for the student who proposes to make Art a Profession, but exclusively for the amateur, it contains just so much information as, and no more than, the latter is likely to require, and that information is presented in the simplest, clearest, and most sensible form."—Illustrated London News.

COLONIAL ADVENTURES AND EXPERIENCES. By a University Man. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Plenty of adventure, and not a few good stories."—Saturday Review.

"Very few readers will begin this book without finishing it, and wishing it were longer."—Literary World.

"In its own line this book stands quite unrivalled, written as it is with Defoe-like simplicity and strength, and we can certainly recommend it to readers young and old."—Aunt Judy's Magazine.

NINETY-THREE; or, The Story of the French Revolution, from the Recollections of my French Tutor. By John W. Lyndon. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"A vivid account of certain incidents in the French Revolution, given as they were related by an old Royalist tutor, who had himself taken part in the great struggle."—Examiner.

"We can thoroughly recommend the book."—John Bull.

"As a story it is most gracefully and tenderly written, and has the power of enlisting the sympathy of the reader in a few simple incidents."—Guardian.

CUMBERLAND and WESTMORLAND

M.P.'s from the Restoration to the Reform Bill of 1867 (1660—1867). By RICHARD S. FERGUSON, M.A., Barrister-at-law, Author of "Early Cumberland and Westmorland Friends," &c. Demy 8vo, price 15s.

"Mr. Ferguson has added an ably compiled volume to the history of local politics."—Athenæum.

"The amount of solid information which one derives from the pleasing pages of this well-told story of political life is something surprising, and we are not a little thankful for the sudden and great acquisition of local knowledge for which we are indebted to Mr. Ferguson."—Cumberland Pacquet.

THE BARONS' WAR: including the Battles of Lewes and Evesham. By WILLIAM HENRY BLAAUW, Esq., M.A. Second Edition, with Additions and Corrections by Professor C. H. Pearson. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF T. & T. CLARK, EDINBURGH.

THE WORKS OF ST. AUGUSTINE.

Messrs. CLARK have much pleasure in publishing the First Issue of Translations of the Writings of St. Augustine, Edited by Rev. MARCUS DODS, M.A. The "CITY OF GOD," in Two Volumes.

The Series will comprise (in addition to the "City of God,")

All the Treatises in the Pelagian, and the Four leading Treatises in the Donatist Controversy. The Treatises against Faustus the Manichean; on Christian Doctrine; the Trinity; the Harmony of the Evangelists; the Sermon on the Mount. The Lectures on the Gospel of St. John, the Confessions, a Selection from the Letters, the Retractations, the Soliloquies, and Selections from the Practical Treatises.

All these Works are of first-rate importance, and only a small proportion of them have yet appeared in an English Dress. The SERMONS and the COMMENTARIES ON THE PSALMS having been already given by the Oxford Translators, it is not intended, at least in the first instance, to publish them.

already given by the Oxford Translators, it is not intended, at least in the first instance, to publish them.

The Series will probably extend to Sixteen or Eighteen Volumes. The Publishers will be glad to

The Additions are too numerous and extensive to be specified in detail, but it may be sufficient to state that they are equivalent to a third volume added to previous editions. Yet the size of the work is not increased, as a special fount of type was cast to enable the printer to preserve cleames without the order of Classification as well as the new Nomenclature of the College of Physicians.

Every part has been thoroughly Raylead associated the college of Physicians.

Every part has been thoroughly Revised, especially the details of temperature in each disease, for which new Diagrams have been cut, after a better method.

In fact, no pains have been spared to still further enhance the character and value of this great work, which, on the appearance of the last edition, was styled by the Medical Times, and may be considered, "the ordinary Text-Book in most of our Schools."

SPIRITUALISM AND ANIMAL MAGNETISM

A Treatise on Dreams, Second Sight, Sonnambulism, Magnetic Sleep, Spiritual Manifestations. Hallucinations. and Spectral Visions.

By Professor G. G. ZERFFI. Ph.Dr., Lecturer on Art at South Kensington.

In considering the subject the following points present themselves:—"That all phenomena must be the mere effect of some causes. That we have an organ in us which can act on the perceptive faculties of the brain from within; that this is the organ of dreams, which has its seat in the ganglionic system of nerves, and may be acted upon from without. That our cerebral faculties may be lowered, and the faculty of our ganglia heightened. That there can be no such phenomena as spiritual manifestations, from an objective point of view, but that they are all subjective. That spectral visions are the products of the disturbed balance between positive and negative magnetism. That persons in whom the negative magnetism is predominant, see, hear, smell, feel, taste, and even think, whatever an individual charged with positive magnetism wills. That there is not a single accredited ghost story, spectral vision, or spiritual manifestation that could not be explained from a natural point of view. That from an ethical point of view, the belief in spiritualism canifestations is most dangerous. That the trade in Spiritualism is a crime against society, demanding as much repression as the trade in fortune-telling. To offer some suggestions, which might lead to further inquiry, is the aim of this work."

London: ROBERT HARDWICKE, 192, Piccadilly.

MESSRS. SANGSTER'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In Church-style cloth, gilt, red edges, 52 Chapters, 192 pp., 8vo, 200 Woodcuts, 16 full-page tinted Illustrations, price 3s., post free.

SUNDAY HALF-HOURS. Extract from Preface:—"On Sunday, in most homes, there are HALF-HOURS when the conversation may be turned to topics in keeping with the time. In the following chapters subjects are suggested for Every Sunday in the Year." The themes of this volume, while adapted for Sunday Reading, are marked by freshness and variety. Sketches of Eminent Men, Descriptions of Sacred Places, and Lessons for Red-letter Days of Domestic History, alternate with directly Biblical Subjects. Brief and graceful Prose yields to select Poetry from Best Authors. Over both is shed the charm of the Pictorial Art, which contributes a picture to every page.

In Imp. 4to, price One Shilling.

2. The Seals Opened; or, The Apocalypse Explained for Bible Students. By Enoch Pond, D.D., Professor in the Theological Seminary, Bangor, United States. Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards. Price 35. 6d.

Extract from Professor Pond's Preface:—"It has been no part of my object to write a critical commentary on the Apocalypse, or a learned elaborate exposition of it. I have designed rather to analyze and open the book; to show briefly the import and application of its symbols; to point out its fulfilment in the past history of the Church and of her enemies; and, as an encouragement to effort, to present her glorious future. My design, in short, has been so to present this last book of the Bible, that it may be read and understood by Christians generally, feeling sure that they will find it, like all other Scripture, to be 'profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.'"

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY. By CHARLES HODGE, D.D., Princeton. FIRST. Royal 8vo, 12s. 6d.

"If we were called to name any living writer who, to Calvin's exegetical tact, unites a large measure of Calvin's grasp of mind and transparent clearness in the department of systematic theology, we should point to this Princeton Professor. He possesses, to use the words of an English critic, the power of seizing and retaining with a rare vigour and tenacity the great doctrinal turning-points in a controversy; while he is able to expose with triumphant dexterity the various subterfuges under which it has been sought to elude them."—British Quarterly Review.

BENEKE'S : PSYCHOLOGY.

THE ELEMENTS OF PSYCHOLOGY, on the Principles of Beneke, stated and illustrated in a Simple and Popular Manner by Dr. G. RAUE, Professor in the Medical Academy of Philadelphia. Fourth Edition, considerably Altered, Improved, and Enlarged, by J. G. Dressler, late Director of the Normal School of Bautzen. Translated from the German. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"There is more profound thought, clearly expressed in homely, concise language, in this work of Dr. Raue, on the orthodox side of metaphysics, than we have yet seen elsewhere. The annotations are as eminently satisfactory as the text. We can heartily commend the work to all students of metaphysics and others who take an interest in pursuing a study of the world of mind."—Standard.

"There can be no more useful treatise on psychology accessible to the English student."—Church Herald.

"Spanish Pictures, drawn with Pen and Pencil,' bears the imprimatur of the Religious Tract Society. The pen is that of the author of 'Swiss Pictures;' one of the pencils is Gustave Dore's, and the others are not unworthy to be associated with his. It therefore follows that the letterpress is pleasant reading, and that many of the sketches are of the highest excellence."—Times.

The Midnight Sky: Familiar Notes on the Stars and Planets. With Thirty-two Star Maps, and numerous other Illustrations. By EDWIN DUNKIN, of the Royal Observatory, and F.R.A.S. Imperial 8vo. 7s. 6d. boards: 9s. extra gilt edges.

ORNÉ

De 220 Planches en Couleur, d'après un Surmoulage pris sur l'Original, RÉPRODUITES EN PHOTOTYPOGRAPHIE

TEXTE ILLUSTRÉ DE NOMBREUSES VIGNETTES SUR BOIS,

PAR W. FRŒHNER,

Ancien Conservateur du Louvre, Membre de l'Institut Archéologique de Rome. Publication de Grand Luxe, Tirée à 200 Exemplaires.

CONDITIONS DE LA SOUSCRIPTION:

L'OUVRAGE entier coûtera 550 francs ; il paraîtra en livraisons à 5 francs, toujours plusieurs à la fois, sous une belle couverture comme celle des PROMENADES DE PARIS. Il sera complètement terminé dans le courant de 1873; les livraisons 1 à 5 paraîtront ensemble le 15 Octobre prochain.

Les gravures seront imprimées en bistre, et montées sur très-beau papier bristol, avec fond gris, 50 centimètres de large, 65 centimètres de long. Le texte, sur le même papier, est imprimé avec luxe à l'imprimerie de MM. CLAYE, en caractères anciens.

Afin de servir comme Spécimen, les livraisons 1 à 5 seront vendues séparément; à partir de la 6º livraison, ni planches, ni livraisons ne se vendront à part ; toutes les demandes, à partir de la 6e livraison, lient les Souscripteurs pour la publication entière, qui se fera rigoureusement dans les limites indiquées ci-dessus.

Le format étant presque du double, mais sans augmentation de prix, de celui des 14 planches noires, publices en dépôt chez M. LACROIX en 1870, nous prévenons MM. les Souscripteurs qu'un nombre de planches, équivalant au prix déjà versé, leur sera donné gratuitement en échange des 3 livraisons reçues antérieurement.

Nous prions donc MM. les Libraires de nous faire connaître le nombre et les noms de leurs Souscripteurs avant le 10 Octobre prochain; passé ce délai, aucune réclamation ne sera acceptée.

Cet ouvrage s'adresse surtout : Aux Bibliothèques princières, Bibliothèques publiques, Musées des Arts et Industries, Bibliothèques universitaires, Ecoles militaires, Archéologues, Sculpteurs, Peintres, et en général à toutes les personnes aimant l'étude de l'antiquité; nous citons parmi nos Souscripteurs:

Le Ministère de la Guerre.

La Direction des Beaux-Arts,

Le Ministère de l'Instruction Publique,

Le Ministère des Cultes des Principautés Danubiennes,

Le Musée des Antiques, à Turin,

Le Ministère de l'Instruction Publique, à Madrid,

Bibliothèques publiques et Souscriptions particulières: 64.

Chaque exemplaire portera le nom du Souscripteur et sera numéroté; les livraisons I à 5 seront tirées à part à un nombre très-restreint, et vendues séparément comme spécimen de la publication.

Prospectuses, containing a full account of the Work, may be had on application.

Les livraisons 1 à 3, imprimées en noir et du format 1/4 colombier, sont, à partir de ce jour, sans aucune valeur et ne pourront par conséquent être considérées ni comme le commencement, ni comme spécimen de la publication qui paraîtra le 15 Octobre.

THE BASKERVILLE VELLUM WOVE NOTE PAPER.

Entered at Stationers' Hall, July, 1871.

Messrs. GOODALL & SON beg to call attention to the New NOTE PAPER which has been introduced by them under the above title. It will be found to possess all the good qualities of the highest class of Writing Papers, viz. :—Purity of substance, tenacity, and freedom of surface, and is equally suitable for Quill as for Steel Pens, and is sold at the price of ordinary Note Paper.

It is made in Four Sizes, viz. :—Large Octavo, Octavo, Albert, and Queen's, with Envelopes to match, in Four Varieties of Surface, viz. :—Rough, Cold-pressed, Mill-finish, and Highly Glazel, and in various thicknesses; and Samples, with Price List, may be had on application.

CHARLES GOODALL & SON, PATENTEES.

The Camden Envelope commends itself for CLEANLINESS IN USE, as it entirely obviates the necessity of wetting the cement with the longue, a practice always disagreeable and frequently injurish from the deleterious substances used for Adhesive Envelopes; whereas the novel and simple adaptation of "The Camden" requires only the clean paper to be damped.

Samples and Prices on Application.
